of it, and said if we could get it rolling they would make it continue," he said. "We did what we could to get the money raised."

Like Berney, Woodward is encouraged by the turn the sport has taken in recent years. He also said it's impacted him in the lessons he learned even after he last took to the mat.

"The school and the coaching staff always made me feel like a leader. I hadn't thought of being one, but I became the captain of the team so I felt I had a responsibility to the other team members to be a mentor to them," he said. "That's carried on through into business as well."

EOU wrestling Head Coach Dustyn Azure said it's "obviously why they're getting inducted" when one considers their contributions to the sport, adding that even decades later, former Eastern wrestlers getting honored "shows the history behind EOU wrestling."

The inductees were teammates for two years during Eastern
