FREE FISHING

BETTER BUSINESS BUREAU WARNS
ABOUT LICENSE
SCAM

The Better Business Bureau Northwest + Pacific is warning Oregon hunters and anglers about an ongoing online scam selling phony licenses. The Oregon Department Fish & Wildlife (ODFW) contacted BBB NW+P to share that its employees have been made aware of at least two people who recently purchased items from the website www.fishinglicense.org after searching online for an Oregon fishing license. BBB has also confirmed two Oregonians filed a complaint and a ScamTracker report against fishing license.org just within the last month, according to a press release.

This is not the first time BBB has alerted consumers to this website, but the page is still up and running. ODFW and other state fish and wildlife agencies have been hearing about customers mistakenly buying items from this website since 2017.

"While it's not a widespread problem, it's unfortunate that even one person would be misled when trying to buy an Oregon fishing license," said Linda Lytle, ODFW license services manager. "This is not the first time we have heard about this and it isn't just happening in Oregon."

Fishinglicense.org, which claims to operate out of Coeur d'Alene, Idaho, has no office.

"We hope our Bigfoot campaign will draw attention and create a bigger 'footprint' of wildfire prevention efforts around the state," says a statement by the Oregon fire marshal. Pictured are copies of various Bigfoot footprint molds from members of The Bigfoot Field Research Organization.

State enlists Bigfoot to remind Oregonians
about fire safety

By Douglas Perry

The Oregonian

Everybody knows Smokey Bear and his famous saying, "Only you can prevent forest fires."

The Oregon state fire marshal has decided his office can do even better. Smokey has a lot of ground to cover for the U.S. Forest Service, so Oregon is offering the bear help in the Pacific Northwest. Oregon Fire Marshal Jim Walker has recruited an even bigger celebrity — who happens to be a local resident — for his own fire safety awareness campaign: Bigfoot.

Fire prevention has never been more important, due to climate change and urbanization. Climate and fire experts have warned of a "new normal" in the Northwest: persistent, destructive wildfires and smoky conditions throughout the hot months — and even beyond.

A new twist
on whistle
pig hunting

They say necessity is the mother of all invention, and I wholeheartedly believe that and think that it is a wise saying. But I also think if you show up everyday sometimes the light bulb just clicks. Or maybe it's just that since you are participating you just happen to inadvertently try some weird new twist and it works.

Whatever the case, people who do something often will have more tricks than someone who occasionally participates in that same activity. So with all of the above said, a week ago a buddy of mine, Christopher Robertson, and I went crappie fishing. For whatever reason, I threw in my Benjamin Marauder .22-caliber airgun and Chris threw in a .22.

Good decision.

As we were driving into our hot spot, we started noticing quite a few whistle pigs out scurrying around. We suddenly went from crappie mode to whistle pig hunting mode. We shot a few and were having a good time. Of course, with the airgun they pop back up faster than when using a .22 or especially a .17 HMR or a .223.

I guess it was turkey season but I have never seen a turkey on the route that we were going to be driving. But, never-say-die Chris had thrown in a Quaker Boy Cyclone push box call just in case. We pulled up to a new spot and shot a couple of whistle pigs and then they went under. For whatever reason, Chris pulled out his Quaker Boy Cyclone push box and hit it a few times. Two or three whistle pigs popped up. I unloaded.

We pulled up to another new spot and shot a couple and of course they too stayed down after seeing their bros get wasted. Chris says, "I'll try to call again."
