WEIGHTS

Continued from Page 7A to act, and they approved it right away," she said.

The school district ended up putting forth about $10,000 for the project, which also received $7,475 from the Wildhorse Foundation. Grande Ronde Hospital added a $1,000 donation, Haddock said, and the Imbler Parent Action Committee covered the remaining $600.

"The results of all those people chipping in to get us new equipment is what you see upstairs," Imber Athletic Director Mike Mills said.

The funds resulted in the purchase of several pieces of equipment and weight sets, including new squat racks, stationary bicycles, an elliptical, a row machine, glute/hamstring machines, dip stations and dumbbells up to 100 pounds, to name a few.

"It's safe," Haddock said. "It's all up to snuff. There is nothing that is going to break on a kid that's going to put them in danger. That was a big thing. You want to have safe equipment."

He anticipates his weights classes will see a boost, noting as an example he currently has about 20 students signed up for the middle school class.

"My class is going to be pretty full," he said.

Athletic teams will also take advantage of the new equipment.

"Anytime you can have stronger athletes competing, it's going to be better for your program," Lakey-Campbell said.

Mills added he heard some buzz from students about it during school registration.

"Hopefully our kids can get excited. There aren't too many exercise or fitness rooms (in Imbler) that can provide this," he said.

There's hope, too, that the weight room's use can expand beyond Imbler students and athletes, as avenues are under consideration to open it for local emergency medical responders.

"We wanted to look at partnering with the fire department (and see) if we can help them out and get some physical training," the superintendent said.

Haddock added he was grateful for the wide range of support to improve the weight room.

"We're super fortunate that our school district cares enough to give us a good chunk for an upgrade, (and) when you look at all the success stories and the places and different things Wildhorse has donated to, we're fortunate to have an entity like that that's willing and gracious to give," he said.
