Outdoor School

Despite rain, wind, and a snow flurry or two, smiles marked the faces of sixth-graders at this year's Outdoor School held at Anthony Lakes Mountain Resort. Due to the large number of students — 180 between South Baker, Haines and Keating — the week was split into two groups. The first 90 went up Monday and came home Wednesday morning. The second group arrived Wednesday and stayed through Friday.

Stations were set up at Anthony Lake, Mud Lake, Hoffer Lakes, and the summit above the lodge. Topics covered trail building, wildlife habitat, insects, water safety, fish, soils, Leave No Trace, watershed, and geology. On their day back at school, students learned about wildland firefighting, skulls, noxious weeds, and orienteering.

One station taught students about fish habitat.
