OF 'DEBRIS' ON NBC

How exactly do you deal with the physical debris that you locate in "Debris"?

The debris is really fun. It is very exciting, scene-to-scene ... whether the debris allows people to go through walls or manipulates weather. We, as actors and as the characters in the show, are constantly on our toes trying to track things and figure it out. We're calling Joel (executive producer J.H. Wyman), saying, "Hey, can the debris do this? Is this the right use of the technology? What do you think about the boundaries and the guardrails here?"

If we're having as much of a challenge in all of the right ways on the day (we shoot) the script, I think audiences will find that constant attention that is not just demanded, but they'll want to provide that to the story and the show.

Do you personally believe there is debris in outer space waiting to fall to Earth?

Well, I'll say it's hard to not think that there's something else out there. You've got our own government secretly siphoning money for UFO research. You've got those (U.S. Navy-supplied) videos that came out of The New York Times. If you've got any basic understanding of statistics and numbers, it would be pretty wild to think that we're all here by ourselves.

I think what we do on the show, and what the question ultimately ends up being is, how does the answer reflect on who we are and how we experience our lives on Earth? I think that's what's kind of fun in terms of the differences between these two (main "Debris") characters, that varying experience that they have as the debris reveals more and more about who we are as Homo sapiens, but also as individuals.
