Animals With Cameras,
A Nature Miniseries

Wildlife cameraman Gordon Buchanan teams up with some pioneering animal scientists to explore stories of animals lives as "told" by the critters themselves, via cameras that are custom-built to fit unobtrusively on the animals. In part one, "Oceans," viewers are given a first-person look at the lives of ocean creatures including sharks, elephant seals, turtles and gannets. Part 2, "Australia," airs next Wednesday.

9 p.m. on PBS
NOVA

While many people associate dinosaurs with a lush, humid prehistoric climate, the new episode "Alaskan Dinosaurs" follows a team of intrepid paleontologists as they examine evidence indicating that some dinosaurs once thrived in the cold, dark winter landscape of the Arctic Circle. How were these creatures able to survive on this turf year-round and successfully raise their young in this hostile environment? The team risks its own safety to learn more about this lost northern world.

9 p.m. on FOOD
Worst Cooks in America

Kitchen boot camp transforms into a seaside resort for "Beach Bites," wherein chefs Anne Burrell and Cliff Crooks lead the recruits into an exploration of some iconic summer dishes and ingredients. After a head-to-head relay race to put together a basket for a beach picnic, the teams are tasked with preparing crab cakes with a sauce and salad. For the main dish round, the chefs fire up the grill to cook grilled fish dinners.

With Mariana van Zeller

The poverty-stricken favelas of Rio de Janeiro and the mountains of Colombia are considered hallowed ground to those inside the world of cocaine trafficking. Host Mariana van Zeller narrows her focus for a new episode called "Cocaine Queens," however, zeroing in not only on the drugs, but on the new breed of narco that is gaining power: "las jefas," or lady bosses.
