“Movie: Let the Right One In”

It's a vampire young-love story, but this 2008 adaptation of Swedish author John Ajvide Lindqvist's novel is no “Twilight.” A lonely boy named Oskar (Kare Hedebrant) falls for a neighbor girl (Lina Leandersson) who happens to be a vampire — handy for keeping the bullies at bay but awkward in the romance department. The film was remade in 2010 as “Let Me In.”

“Movie: Walk Hard: The Dewey Cox Story”

Often a supporting player, the talented John C. Reilly (“Chicago”) is front and center in this amusing celebrity biography satire, co-written and co-produced by Judd Apatow (“Knocked Up”). His character is an unlikely music legend who indulges in every vice and cliché ever associated with that lifestyle. Jenna Fischer (“The Office”), “Saturday Night Live” alumnus Tim Meadows and some actual music icons (notably, the Temptations) are featured.

“Movie: Twilight”

Fans of Stephenie Meyer's popular book series eagerly awaited the first screen adaptation, and they showed up in such force, a sequel got the go-ahead the day after this movie opened. Director Catherine Hardwicke's appropriately moody version casts Kristen Stewart as heroine Bella, whose adjustment to a new high school encompasses her attraction to the magnetic Edward (Robert Pattinson) — a vampire, as she soon learns.

“Candy”

Based on a true story, this crime drama miniseries stars Jessica Biel as Candy Montgomery, a 1980s Texas housewife who seemingly had it all — husband, two kids, nice house in the suburbs — but the pressure of conformity drove her to murder her friend from church with an axe. Timothy Simons, Melanie Lynskey, Pablo Schreiber, and Raúl Esparza also star. (ORIGINAL)
