LA GRANDE — Side A Brewing is bringing back the Side A-ley concerts this summer.

The first show features The Jack Maybe Project, starting at 7:30 p.m. Friday, June 3. As the concert series name suggests, the music will be in the alley — which is actually the brewpub's back patio.

The band will play until 9:30 p.m. The brewpub is located at 1219 Washington Ave.

"The Side A team is very excited to be bringing back live music to our patio," said Caiti Burke, event coordinator. "We love getting to interact with the community in this way, and are stoked to have the chance to host 14 different artists and bands over the course of this summer. Music can be such a beautiful way for people to come together, and we hope that you all will come out and sing, dance, and drink with us."

ABOUT THE BAND

The Jack Maybe Project formed about five years ago in Portland, and plays around the Pacific Northwest.

Although the band is a "rotating cast of characters," Jack Maybe said the four main players are himself, Bry Sawyers, Will St. John and Dennis Eash.

Maybe founded the band, and others joined soon thereafter.

"We play a mixture of folk and blues with mostly original music," he said. "Though we do have a few covers, a couple traditional, and a couple standards to liven things up."
