The Illinois State Capitol in Springfield is the site of a new housing pilot project approved by the state's highest court.

SPRINGFIELD — The Illinois Supreme Court on Tuesday approved a new housing pilot project in Springfield, despite opposition from farm groups. The project, which would allow the state to build up to 1,000 affordable housing units in the city, was approved by a 4-3 vote. The dissenting justices argued that the project would harm the agricultural industry and the environment. The majority, however, argued that the project would provide much-needed housing for the city's growing population.
