NATIONAL FEEDER AND STOCKER CATTLE (Federal-State Market News) St. Joseph, Mo. Nov. 11

This week	Last week	Last year
324,100	326,600	340,900

Compared to Nov. 4: Steers and heifers of all weights traded mostly steady to $5 higher. Light weight calves bound for wheat pasture sold with very good demand after rains across the wheat belt improved grazing conditions. Demand for unweaned, fleshy calves remains light to moderate, but as the weather finally turns, hard frost and cooler daytime temperatures will make it a little easier for cattle owners to straighten out their new purchases. Primarily spring calves on offer throughout most major trading regions, but the yearlings that were available this week had no trouble finding new homes. The cattle industry has finally shown some strength the past couple of weeks and the fact that most markets have held firm or tacked on a few dollars at a time lend some credibility to the modest rally, removing the emotionally driven volatility up and down moves we nearly expect these days. There was no real knee-jerk reaction in the cattle complex to the election, but that's not to say that cattle owners didn't initially suffer some fear and anxiety early Nov. 10. A sharp overnight selloff in the financials after Donald Trump's surprise win was short-lived though, and actually by the close on Nov. 11 the Dow had found a new record high. Markets and traders are unsure what the new President Elect and his policies will entail and it's certainly too early to predict any repercussions in the beef industry. Cattle futures traded sharply lower Monday but otherwise closed modestly higher during each trading session. Fat cattle trade took a long time to develop this week.

A very few early week live sales, including the Online Fed Cattle Auction, rang in at $103-104, just a hair lower than last week, and most everyone breathed a sigh of relief. By Nov. 11 though, sellers were feeling pretty optimistic and asking prices were pushed higher. Packers were known to need some cattle, not having a lot of captive supply for the month. Cattle feeders and packers negotiated till nearly suppertime Friday evening before trading some volume at $103-105 Live with northern dressed sales at $162. Many feel the market has finally found a comfortable trading range for the time being. Retailers will continue to aggressively feature beef items as long as they are enjoying profitable margins as they are now, just as packers will continue to keep kills over 600,000. Auction volume this week included 38 percent over 600 lbs. and 38 percent heifers.
