Inslee rolls out climate agenda

By DON JENKINS
Capital Press

OLYMPIA — Washington Gov. Jay Inslee on Monday outlined a $626.5 million spending plan to promote electric vehicles and solar panels, and fund other climate-related programs.

The policies would encourage solar farms in Eastern Washington and discourage heating with natural gas. Electric vehicle buyers would be eligible for a rebate of up to $12,500.

Wildfires and floods show the state must hurry to slash carbon emissions, Inslee said. “Climate change is moving faster, so we have to move faster,” he said.

The top-ranking Republican on the House Environment and Energy Committee, Mary Dye, said the governor offers green subsidies, but not relief from natural disasters.

“He’s so narrowly focused on emissions,” said Dye, who represents an Eastern Washington district. “None of his policies will get rid of the wildfires, and they won’t mitigate losses of life and property in catastrophic flooding,” she said.

Inslee said he will propose four climate bills to the Legislature. Inslee touched on the legislation at a press conference, though the actual bills have not been released.

Inslee said his plans will not require raising taxes. The federal infrastructure bill will provide some money and the Build Back Better Act, if passed, will provide more, he said.

State Sen. Mark Schoesler, R-Ritzville, said rural residents, especially in Eastern Washington, will end up subsidizing electric vehicle buyers and losing land to solar panels.

“It’s a war on rural Washington,” he said. “Whether it’s a direct or indirect tax, it does cost.”

Under one proposal, natural gas would be banned from heating new buildings by 2034. Last year, Inslee proposed a ban starting in 2030.

Inslee rebuffed the suggestion he was softening his stance. “I would describe it as making it more effective because we (can) get it passed, and that’s what really counts,” he said.

Inslee proposes appropriating $100 million for electric vehicle rebates and $100 million for grants to utilities, tribes, state agencies and nonprofit groups to install solar panels.

The governor also wants to reform how the state approves renewable-energy projects. The transition to renewable energy requires new facilities, according to the governor’s office.

“How many thousands of acres of farmland will be sacrificed for solar panels?” Schoesler asked. “Let’s put an 800-acre solar farm in King County and put up 100 windmills and go from there.”

The governor proposes rebates of $7,500 for new electric vehicles and $5,000 for used ones. Buyers who make less than $61,000 a year would be eligible for an additional $5,000.

“Rural Washington drivers will be the last to adopt electric vehicles,” Schoesler said. “For people driving long distances, they are just less practical.”

Lower Long Tom becomes Oregon’s 22nd wine AVA

By GEORGE PLAVEN
Capital Press

A new American Viticultural Area, or AVA, has been designated in Oregon’s Southern Willamette Valley denoting the area’s unique wine-growing climate and geography.

The Lower Long Tom AVA was approved by the Alcohol and Tobacco Tax and Trade Bureau on Nov. 10, and went into effect on Dec. 10. It is Oregon’s 22nd AVA statewide, and the 10th nested within the Willamette Valley.

AVAs are a federal appellation for wine-producing regions with distinct characteristics, such as soils, elevation and other physical features.

Winemakers in the area can use the AVA name as a marketing tool, potentially fetching higher prices from consumers based on quality and reputation of their grapes.

“Oregon’s newest viticultural area acknowledges the increasing appreciation our grape growers and winemakers are developing for site-specific growing conditions and flavor complexity,” said Tom Danowski, executive director of the Oregon Wine Board.

Located in Lane and Benton counties, the Lower Long Tom AVA is characterized by a chain of rolling hills, separated by east-to-west valleys formed by the tributaries of the region’s namesake Long Tom River. Most vineyards in the appellation are on stream-cut ridge lines, at an elevation of between 450 and 650 feet.

The 25,000-acre area is home to 12 wineries and 24 vineyards, with 575 acres of vines. Like the rest of the Willamette Valley, Pinot noir is the predominant grape variety, though winemakers also produce Chardonnay, Riesling, Pinot gris and Sauvignon blanc, among others.

Four years ago, Dieter Boehm of High Pass Winery in Junction City petitioned the TTB to establish the Lower Long Tom AVA.

Boehm’s petition describes several distinguishing characteristics, including relatively shallow clay-loam soils that create stress on the vines and foster ripening of fruit. To the west, the Oregon Coast Range serves as a “weather shield,” with the rain shadow contributing to consistent winegrape maturity.

“In the shadow of Prairie Mountain and the Coast Range, Lower Long Tom will add a unique dimension to the Willamette Valley’s esteemed reputation for extraordinarily elegant and expressive fruit,” Danowski said.

Matt Shown, a second-generation winemaker at Brigadoon Wine Co. in Junction City, described the area as “warm, genuine, authentic and down-to-earth, with passionate owners and farmers connected to the land.”

“That for this place goes beyond wine and permeates our daily lives,” Shown said.

More wolves killed in Washington state

By DON JENKINS
Capital Press

Two more wolves have been killed in a pack that attacked calves in south-east Washington, the state Department of Fish and Wildlife said Thursday.

One wolf, a juvenile male, was legally killed Dec. 8 under a lethal-removal permit issued to a producer by Fish and Wildlife. The wolf was the first to be removed under such a permit.

The other wolf, a female yearling, was found dead Dec. 5 along a road and clearly had been hit by a vehicle, the department said.

Previously, the department killed an adult male wolf Nov. 18. Another wolf was hit and killed by a vehicle Nov. 5. The pack had at least nine members before the four known mortalities.

The pack attacked cattle belonging to three different ranchers in Columbia County between Aug. 25 and Nov. 15. The pack formed this year and has yet to be named.

The department issued lethal-removal permits to two ranchers. With the death of the wolf Dec. 8, the department has withdrawn the other permit.

The attacks have been occurring on private land. The department said it may remove more wolves if the pack attacks more livestock.

State law allows ranchers to shoot wolves caught attacking livestock. In rare cases, Fish and Wildlife issues permits to shoot wolves coming onto private land.
