California, though some contacts report that output remains down year over year. Labor shortages are preventing some production facilities for utilizing additional volumes of milk, and plant managers say that they are selling spot loads of milk to nearby states with lighter milk production. Some processors say that purchasers from farther away states are interested in milk loads, but that a shortage of available tankers and truck drivers is preventing them from fulfilling the orders. Across all Classes, demand is steady.

Milk production continues to decline in Arizona as higher temperatures are reducing cow comfort. Contacts say that they are pulling in milk volumes from other nearby states, to aid in meeting current production demands. Demand for Class I is steady, while Class II demand is trending higher.

Farm level milk output is steady in New Mexico. Milk producers say that volumes are down compared to this time last year. Some processing plants in the state are, reportedly, running below capacity due to labor shortages. Plant managers say that they are selling loads of milk to nearby states with tighter milk availability.

Class I and II demands are steady. Milk

Contacts report that year to date milk output is in line with previously forecasted levels. Milk is available in the area, and production facilities are running busy schedules. Some plant managers say that labor shortages are contributing to unplanned down time this week. Demand is steady across all Classes. Milk production is uneven in the mountain states of Idaho, Utah, and Colorado. Labor shortages are causing unplanned down time at some production facilities. Stakeholders say that milk is available in the area, and that spot loads are being sold from $3 to $6 under Class IV. Some stakeholders are, reportedly, moving loads of milk to other parts of the country with tighter supplies. Class I and III demand is unchanged. Demand for condensed skim is strong in the West, though some stakeholders say that limited tanker availability is making it difficult to move loads. Contracts for condensed skim are steady.

Cream inventories are available regionally to meet production needs. Stakeholders say that demand for cream is strong. Contacts report that ice cream and butter makers are running busy schedules to build inventories for the coming months. Western cream multiples are unchanged at the bottom, but the top

NATIONAL FEEDER AND STOCKER CATTLE (Federal-State Market News)

This Week Last Week Last Year 241,700 241,800 253,500 Compared to last week, steers and heifers sold steady to 3.00 higher. The supply of feeders was moderate this week as farmers and ranchers look forward to having some higher temperatures to get the grass growing and the placements. Ranchers are showing up to special replacement cattle sales, however, they are taking in inventory before arrival at the sale as some ranchers are curtailing numbers country, short grass is seen in many areas and forage growth is behind normal for this time of year. Lower than normal carryover of baled hay from last year is a concern as ranchers struggle with limited progress of hay produce tion. Ranchers have been champing at the bit to get the swathers out to get first cutting of alfalfa down or to get wheat hay laid down. A multiday heat wave will be in the Corn Belt this week and farmers are ready to take advantage of their large planters to put a lot of corn and soybeans in the ground in a short period of time. Planting progress can move along at a very quick pace with the size of equipment now-a-days. Long hours are not
