How to Restore Youth and Cultivate Beauty.

CLOGGED PORES PLAY THE MISCHIEF with the complexion. Unless you keep the pores open, all the face preparations and powders in the world cannot keep your complexion beautiful. Clogged pores are impossible when LOLA MONTEZ is used. This wonderful skin food and tissue builder is the only scientific and harmless specific for diseased, scaly, rough pimply complexion. It restores the complexion of youth. By its use the ladies of America are destined to become the most beautiful in the world as they are now the best educated and most intelligent. If your complexion is a sort of annoyance to yourself, contentment is impossible. It is a burden. Try Lola Montez Cream, and you will be so delighted at the result that you will carry the good news to your friends. Price, 75 cents per pot.

Lola is Shown in Bloom Rose Rosette.

In the leaves of the rose
A romance is waiting,
Till the summer wind blows
From the leaves of the rose
To the page of pure prose
What's so well worth relating
In the leaves of the rose
A romance is waiting.

In the air all around
A coy song is delaying;
There's a faint sighing sound
In the air all around,
And love words abound,
Hidden music betraying
In the air all around
A coy song is delaying.

In the heart of the sea
There's a symphony sleeping;
There is wafted to me
From the heart of the sea
A divine melody.

In this commonplace age
Lives the hero obscurely,
But the elements rage
In this commonplace age,
And death flings down his gage,
In the age quite as surely;
In this commonplace age
Dies the hero obscurely.

In this world of the mart
Rises sometimes a poet,
All unenvied his part
In this world of the mart,
For he labors for art,
But the world will not know it;
In this world of the mart
None the less thrives the poet.

"THE PLAYERS."

When Mellicent Dwight packed her three gowns, her notice book, her character photographs and her letter of introduction in the attic room of a New York boarding house her joy was unconfined. The boarding house was east of Third avenue, and the attic room was four flights from the street; but when one is talented and 20, and visits New York for the first time with a flattering introduction to an influential manager, one does not count stairs.

On the first evening Mellicent ate her gristly roast and wilted salad with the air of a young woman who is assured of champagne and sweetbreads at the week's end and wondered whether it would be three days or five before she "signed" with the influential manager and engaged quarters better befitting the comedienne of a metropolitan company.

Two weeks later Mellicent occupied the same attic room on the east side, but boarded cheaply at a Third avenue eating house, where she could breakfast heartily for 15 cents and dine luxuriously for 20.

One week more and Mellicent was boiling her breakfast cocoa over the gas jet and washing her handkerchiefs in the bathtub and flattening them on the window pane to dry. In those days she blacked her boots with ink and stuffed her mirror frame with newspaper advertisements for ballet girls and lady fencers. The letter of recommendation which the influential manager had kindly returned was streaked and worn by constant handling, and the notice book was dog eared.

On one end of her bureau was a box of letters from the man who wished to marry her. At first Mellicent used to read and sigh over these pledges of affection. It was such a pity, she thought, that he cared like that for a girl who never could marry him. Now she read and sighed over them with a different emotion. "It can't come to that," she would say.

* * * * * *

At the start there had been a certain piquancy in the venture. To be talented and 20 and to seek her fortune alone in a great city read uncommonly like the first chapter of a romance. Besides New York captivated the girl. Her rounds of the day finished, she would ride from the Battery to Harlem on the elevated, price diamond necklaces and air her three gowns with the best of them on that Broadway promenade whose glitter was constantly suggestive of footlights and an orchestral accompaniment.

The agencies charmed by their absolute novelty.

To penetrate to that private territory, to see a slip bearing her name and address placed in a pigeonhole labeled "Soubrettes and Ingenues," seemed to Mellicent a unique and exciting experience, one well worth hours of waiting and the comments, sarcastic or indifferent, of the manager and his satellites.

All this, however, as I said, was at the start.

To be the heroine of a romance is one thing, the heroine of a realistic novel quite another.

"I'm beginning to suspect the truth of all these horrid stories of baffled genius struggling against adverse fate," she wrote near the close of the third week to the man who wished to marry her.

Managers all seemed in league against her—all save one, who, from the beginning, had treated her with unaccountable forbearance. He had even sent her tickets for a new play. There was a soubrette part in it that was badly done, he said. The author was a friend of his and—well, he couldn't promise anything, but he'd like her to see the part.

The soubrette was bad—worse even than Mellicent had hoped; weak, common, self conscious.

"If such people can obtain engagements, then why not I?" she said the next morning in reporting the play. "I'm not a raw amateur; I studied for two years with a well known actor and stage manager. I've played over and [illegible] student's matinees and [illegible] in incredulously.

In the parlor below a tall figure rose to meet her.

"Look here, Milly," the man said decisively. "I've come to take you back with me tonight. You might as well marry me now as any time. You'll only waste time fooling round here."

Milly regarded the speaker hopelessly. It was as though the walls of destiny were closing in upon her.

"I can't, John," she protested, "I—I never promised, and you have no license."

"But there's no need of a license here," he returned, ignoring the other clause of the girl's objection. "There's an old friend of mine, a Methodist minister, only a block away, who's all ready. Why, Milly, it's the easiest thing in the world if only you make up your mind to it. We'll get supper at the Metropolis and take the next train back to Boston. I must be at the office tomorrow."

Mellicent shook her head.

"I can't decide all at once, John," she entreated. "I must have time to think."

She glanced at the black marble clock on the mantel. Half past 4. In half an hour her future would be decided for her. It was almost a relief to shift the responsibility from her own shoulders.

The man consented grudgingly. "Remember," he said gravely, watching her brown, piquant profile outlined against the white window curtain, "remember, if you marry me you must give up all those notions about acting. I won't have my wife set up for everybody to stare at." His words were harsh, but his eyes were affectionate.

Mellicent nodded. "I understand," she returned; "if I give up now, it will be for always."

"I'll put on my hat," she added. "We might as well go now and have it over."

"I couldn't help myself," she thought wearily as she followed him into the street. "They wouldn't give me a chance: there was no way but this."

When she returned, there was a plain gold ring upon her left hand.

Mellicent eyed it incredulously all the time she was packing her trunk. The notice books, the character photographs, the list of agencies and the letter of introduction she laid in the wastebasket. As she crossed to the door her dress brushed a yellow envelope from the table:

DEAR MISS DWIGHT—I missed Boyle at luncheon, but waylaid him at the hotel this afternoon and extracted his promise to give you a trial. Will let you know about rehearsals later. Lucky, wasn't it, that the chance came before you left New York? Sincerely,

EDWARD ROBERTS.

At the foot of the stairs John Walker drew his wife's arm affectionately within his own. "What's the matter, Mellicent?" he said gravely, "you look as though you'd seen a ghost."

"Only the ghost of a comedy actress that never was to be," said Mellicent steadily. "You must be hungry, John. Will there be time to have a steak cooked for our supper?"—Margaret Dodge in Kate Field's Washington.

STILL TALKING.

THE SILVER QUESTION IN THE SENATE STILL UNSETTLED.

The Vote on the Repeal Bill as Far Away as Ever—The Lower House Engaged in the Debate on the Federal Election Laws.

SENATE.

Monday, Oct. 3.

Sherman called attention to a misstatement in a recent speech of Senator White of California, quoting from the Bankers' Magazine as to the coinage act of 1873. There was no such statement in the Bankers' Magazine, he said, and the whole statement was a manufactured lie from beginning to end. It was worse than forgery, and the absolute fabrication was branded with the brand of infamy. He did not blame the senator from California, because the alleged article from the magazine had frequently been quoted by others. White of California said he had taken the extract from a work written by a very prominent Republican, and had not himself examined the Bankers' Magazine. If the extract was not correct he would omit it from the later edition of his speech. The silver repeal bill was then taken up.

Tuesday, Oct. 3.

Dubois introduced a bill enabling several Western states to maintain schools of mining. White acknowledged his error in quoting an article on John Sherman. Dolph spoke in favor of the repeal bill. He said nothing could be done for silver without international cooperation. Power of Montana spoke against repeal. Palmer of Illinois denounced the delay on the part of the senate on the financial question.

Wednesday, Oct. 4.

Morgan reported a bill from the foreign affairs committee making an appropriation for the enforcement of the Chinese exclusion laws. Butler of South Carolina opposed the repeal of the silver purchase act. He defended the president, who, he said, had not attempted to use his influence to control legislation. Blackburn of Kentucky also opposed repeal. He believed silver is equal to gold, and should be so regarded.

Thursday, Oct. 5.

Presidential appointments to territorial positions were considered in executive session. Hill criticized the president, saying the home rule plank in the Democratic platform had been violated. Friends of the president held that the appointments were of a national character.

Friday, Oct. 6.

Blackburn introduced a substitute repeal amendment to the repeal bill, providing for free coinage of American silver. Peffer's resolution creating a select committee to inquire what legislation may be necessary to improve the banking system was referred to the finance committee. Speeches were made on the repeal bill.

Saturday, Oct. 8.

Voorhees stated that on Wednesday he would ask the senate to sit in continuous session until a vote was taken on the repeal bill. Peffer introduced by request a bill providing for the coinage of all the gold and silver in the treasury and all that will be offered, and the issuing enough paper money to bring the volume of currency to $6,000,000,000. Of this $600,000,000 are to be distributed in the states and territories pro rata, according to the population, to be expended in public improvements. The bill further provides that all citizens of the United States offering their labor be employed under conditions of the bill. Peffer said he did not consider the country ripe for such legislation yet.

HOUSE.

Monday, Oct. 3.

The repeal of the federal election laws was under debate all day.

Tuesday, Oct. 3.

A bill was introduced to devote the proceeds of the property escheated from the Mormons in Utah to charitable purposes. The repeal of the federal election laws was discussed.

Wednesday, Oct. 4.

After the reports of committees were presented the federal election bill was considered. Swett of Idaho denounced Cleveland for his course on the silver question.

Thursday, Sept. 28.

A bill was passed disqualifying United States judges from sitting in cases in which they had ever been interested as counsel or by ties of consanguinity. The bill restoring the property of the Mormon church, now in the hands of a receiver, in accordance with the provisions of the Edmunds-Tucker act, created some opposition. Delegate Rawlins explained that as polygamy had been given up the property should be given up to the original owner. The supreme court of Utah had so held, but the passage of this bill was necessary to permit the receiver to make restoration. The bill was passed. The election bill occupied the remainder of the session.

Friday, Oct. 5.

After routine work was finished, the debate on the election laws was resumed.

Saturday, Oct. 8.

Debate on the federal election laws occupied the whole day.

Another large irrigation enterprise has been inaugurated which will prove of great benefit to the northern part of San Bernardino county. It is proposed to reclaim a large area of the Mojave dessert in the vicinity of Daggett by means of a dam across the Mojave river and a submerged flume for the purpose of taping the underflow. Two water rights have been located, one claiming 100,000 miner's inches, and the other 1,000,000 inches of unappropriated water of the Mojave river. The water is to be diverted from the river and conveyed upon the land to be irrigated by means of a canal 100 feet wide at the bottom and 150 feet wide on top and 10 feet deep. The dam and submerged flume are to be completed by Jan. 1 of next year, and the canals are to be completed by March 1 next.

BALD HEADS!

What is the condition of yours? Is your hair dry, harsh, brittle? Does it split at the ends? Has it a lifeless appearance? Does it fall out when combed or brushed? Is it full of dandruff? Does your scalp itch? Is it dry or in a heated condition? If these are some of your symptoms be warned in time or you will become bald.

Skookum Root Hair Grower

is what you need. Its production is not an accident, but the result of scientific research. Knowledge of the diseases of the hair and scalp led to the discovery of how to treat them. "Skookum" contains neither minerals nor oils. It is not a Dye, but a delightfully cooling and refreshing Tonic. By stimulating the follicles, it stops falling hair, cures dandruff and grows hair on bald heads.

To Keep the scalp clean, healthy, and free from irritating eruptions, by the use of Skookum Skin Soap. It destroys parasitic insects, which feed on and destroy the hair.

If your druggist cannot supply you send direct to us, and we will forward prepaid, on receipt of price. Grower, $1.00 per bottle; 6 for $5.00. Soap, 50c per jar; 6 for $2.50.

CAUTION.—No Tags will be received before January 1st, 1894, nor after February 1st, 1894. Each package containing tags must be marked plainly with Name of Sender, Town, County, State, and Number of Tags in each package. All charges on packages must be prepaid.

READ.—SPEAR HEAD possesses more qualities of intrinsic value than any other plug tobacco produced. It is the sweetest, the toughest, the richest. SPEAR HEAD is absolutely, positively and distinctively different in flavor from any other plug tobacco. A trial will convince the most skeptical of this fact. It is the largest seller of any similar shape and style on earth, which proves that it has caught the popular taste and pleases the people. Try it and help to swell the contest for prizes. You get a TIN TAG on every 10 cent piece of SPEAR HEAD you buy. Send in the tags, no matter how small the quantity.

Very sincerely,
THE P. J. SORG COMPANY, MIDDLETOWN, OHIO.

A list of the people obtaining these prizes in this county will be published in this paper immediately after February 1st, 1894.
