

OVER 300 DROWNED.

The Steamship Elbe, Struck by the Crathie, Goes Down.

ONLY ONE BOATLOAD IS SAVED.

The Crathie Cut the Elbe Almost in Two and the Doomed Vessel Immediately Went to the Bottom—Passengers Were Asleep and when Awakened Rushed on Deck in Their Night Clothing—All Night in the Biting Cold in an Open Boat—Tales of Survivors.

The North German Lloyd steamer Elbe was sunk with nearly 400 passengers aboard in the North Sea by collision with the British steamer Crathie, bound from Rotterdam for Aberdeen.

The following statement of the disaster was officially given by the German vice consul, Herr Bradder, after sifting all the interviews with survivors and cross-questioning officers and crew, and it may be classed as the consensus of the officers' opinions:

"The collision occurred 45 miles from the Mersschelling lightship. Though both the Elbe and the colliding steamer Crathie were going full steam ahead, the concussion was very slight." Immediately after the collision the Elbe began to settle down, stern first, her bow mounting high into the air and rendering it impossible to reach some of the boats.

"As everybody crowded upon the deck immediately after the shock, and in a state of great alarm, it was impossible for the orders of the captain, who was standing on the bridge, that the women and children should be saved first, to be obeyed.

"A rush was made for the boats that were accessible. The first boat to touch the water was immediately swamped and the passengers who had crowded into it were drowned. The second boat launched was lost sight of in the high sea which was running, but it is feared she capsized.

"In the third boat, at the last moment, when the water was up to the promenade deck, the vessel sinking under their feet, and two minutes before she disappeared, there crowded 19 men, the women and children having rushed to the other side, owing, it is said, to a command that they should get into the boats there.

"This third boat pulled away from the ship, and in so doing shortly afterward passed a lady passenger, Miss Anna Buecher, who clung to the gunwale or side of the lifeboat. Some time elapsed before she could be pulled into the boat.

"The 20 survivors drifted about for nearly 12 hours, the heavy seas repeatedly washing over the small craft, which was in constant danger of being swamped, and drenching its occupants who had not a morsel of food.

"Miss Buecher lay in the bottom of the boat half-drowned and semi-unconscious. The lights of many vessels were seen all around, but not one approached, though after daylight a steamer and two fishing vessels passed. Their crews, however, did not notice the signals of the lifeboat. Finally, the waving of a shirt from the boat attracted the attention of the crew of the fishing smack Wildflower, which rescued the survivors with extreme difficulty.

"After the collision the Crathie passed under the stern of the Elbe and proceeded on her course without paying any heed to the cries of the people on board of the sinking steamer.

A preliminary inquiry was held into the sinking of the Elbe. The surviving officers said in substance:

"The Elbe was proceeding on a south-southwest course down the channel, steaming about 15 knots. When about 45 miles off Mersschelling lightship a vessel was seen approaching two and a half points off the port bow. This vessel's course was apparently west-northwest. According to the rule of the road at sea the vessel should have ported her helm and passed under the Elbe's stern.

Both vessels, however, kept their courses and struck. The shock of the concussion was very slight."

The officers of the North German Lloyd Steamship company have given for publication the following figures as the total number of persons on board the Elbe:

Fifteen first cabin, 31 second cabin, two going from Bremen to Southampton, 187 steerage and 149 crew, of whom 20 are known to be saved, making a total of 314 lost.

At least, that is the number missing and there is very little hope entertained that any of those who eventually be heard from alive. It is true, however, that some Yarmouth and Lowestoft fishing smacks, which are out on cruises in the vicinity of where the Wildflower picked up the Elbe's boat containing 20 survivors, have not yet returned to their home ports, so there still remains the possibility that one or more of them may have rescued some of the unfortunates of the lost steamer.

Fifteen fishing smacks which sailed near the spot where the Elbe lies have arrived at Lowestoft. Not one reported having seen any sign of the wreck or passengers. Their reports almost banished the last hope of finding the second lifeboat. Another smack returning later brought a boat's rudder and log line, but there was nothing to indicate what boat they were from.

The Crathie Leaves the Elbe.

When the Crathie struck the Elbe the shock was very slight. The engines of the Crathie were reversed and she backed out of the hole amidships in the Elbe and the water rushed in. Survivors say that rockets were sent up from the deck of the Elbe before she went down, but the Crathie paid no attention to them and steamed away. The Crathie was not damaged much by the collision. The officers of the Crathie assert that the Elbe immediately disappeared and they thought she had proceeded, uninjured, on her way. The Crathie steamed around the place of the accident, but saw no boats containing passengers.

Confusion and Panic on the Elbe.

Although the force of the collision was not very great, the passengers in the first and second cabins were awakened and heard the rushing waters. Partially dressed they rushed up the companionway and joined the panic-stricken, shivering people who had preceded them. Everything was confusion. While women and children were screaming and men rushing excitedly about, the captain was shouting orders which could not be heard. Attempts to lower the boats were delayed by frozen ropes and axes were used to chop the lifeboats loose. When a boat was lowered it was almost immediately capsized by the waves or swamped by too many passengers jumping into it. So far as known only one lifeboat got away from the sinking ship.

There were many Americans among the lost passengers. Lieutenant Brunson and wife of Oakland were drowned. Mrs. Brunson was a baroness, related to Countess Von Moltke, and was on her way to Berlin to claim a fortune belonging to her. She was 18 years old, very beautiful and popular. Lieutenant Brunson belonged to the National Guard of California and had a host of friends.

Henry N. Castle, prominent among the Hawaiian republicans and owner of the Honolulu Advertiser, was also drowned.

We might tell you more about One Minute Cough Cure, but you probably know that it cures a cough. Every one does who has used it. It is a perfect remedy for coughs, colds, hoarseness. It is an especial favorite for children, being pleasant to take and quick in curing. Geo. H. Haskins, druggist.

At Newcastle, Cal., the family of William Freitas, including four adults and a baby, were burned and bruised and the residence destroyed by an explosion of a loaded stick of firewood and fire which followed the explosion. The members of the family were comfortably seated about a stove, the fire having a few moments previously been replenished with a big piece of wood, when suddenly there was a terrific explosion, the concussion hurling the four grown persons to the floor and blowing the babe from its chair across the room. The fragments of the stove flew about like a charge of canister and blazing bits of wood rained fire in the room. The residence was burned to the ground.

The will of the late James G. Fair which disposed of $20,000,000 has been stolen from the county clerk's office in San Francisco, and no trace has been found of the thief or the document. As the will would probably be contested, the loss of it further complicates matters.

It is learned from an authoritative source that the Hawaiian government is seriously considering the advisability of executing the royalists who were prominent in the recent revolution against the republic. Information as to the determination of the government will probably reach Washington by the next steamer from the islands which will be due in San Francisco some time next week. It is already known that ex-Queen Liliuokalani will be banished, and it is not impossible that she will arrive in the United States on the same steamer.

The United States circuit court of appeals has rendered a decision in the case of the Oregon and California Railway company and the Oregon Central Railway company against the United States in favor of the railroad companies. The case involved 300,000 acres of land in the vicinity of Forest Grove, Or., valued at $1,000,000. It has long been known as "the Quadrant case," because the points involved pertain to lands in the quadrant made by an angle in the road at Forest Grove.

The curfew bell is to toll again in Canada. After being silent in the Dominion for 100 years it is to be regularly rung again in the interest of the homes and children of that country. The legislators of Quebec and Ontario have, on the recommendation of the Society for the Protection of Women and Children, passed laws authorizing city officials to re-establish the curfew bell. It is to be rung at whatever time may be determined on by the city councils, and the ringing of the curfew is to be the signal for the children to get off the streets and go to their homes. If found on the streets after the toll of the bell, any officer of the city may order them home, and if they refuse to go they will then have the right to take them home.

Thomas Douglass, who established the first school in San Francisco, died in New London, Conn., recently, aged 88 years. He was a graduate of Yale and came to California in 1848 and established a school which prospered for a while. When the gold fever broke out the town was nearly deserted and he was forced to give up the business for lack of pupils. He made money in mining and invested it in real estate in San Francisco. In 1851 he went to San Jose and bought land which made him rich, a portion of it being in what is now the best residence section. In 1859 he returned to Connecticut to conduct a litigation, which last seven years, and he never returned.

Ednee Brower, the 12-year-old invalid who was known either personally or through correspondence to people all over the United States, died at Hot Springs, Ark., a few days ago. For seven years she had been unable to walk or move any part of her body except her hands and head on account of injuries to her spine received by a fall when she was only 5 years old. She was a bright child and could read and write. For a year or more past she had been collecting canceled postage stamps and friends from all over the United States were sending them to her. In this way she supported herself by selling stamps to dealers. During the past year she collected 1,000,000 stamps in this way, for which she received $100. She had to lie on her stomach all the time, and in that uncomfortable position she would work day after day writing letters and counting stamps that had been sent her, but she was always bright and cheerful. A few days ago the mails brought her a copy of the Washington Post, which contained a notice that she was a fraud and not an invalid. This notice had the effect of breaking Ednee Brower's heart, for she became ill and died. She talked of the publication all the while and said she would collect no more stamps, for she would rather starve than be pronounced a fraud.

It is worth its weight in gold. We won't keep store or house without it." Get a free trial bottle to Geo. H. Haskins' Drug Store.

All is quiet at the islands.

Leonard S. Eaton, widely known in this country, died at Pittsburg, aged 76, of pneumonia. Mr. Eaton was born in Groton, N. He was a prominent member in the Baptist church and originated the Baptist Chautauque society, was Sunday school superintendent for 25 years and deacon in his church 30 years.

The attorney general has written an opinion which causes great consternation among army and navy officers who will undoubtedly test its legality in the courts. Mr. Oney decides that in making their returns for the income tax they must include all allowances as pay they receive from the government. This means their quarters, fuel, forage and mileage they receive when they travel for the government. The officers are asking now whether the same rule is to be applied to senators and representatives and other officers of the government. Congressmen receive mileage and an allowance for stationery and clerk hire, and cabinet officers and other civil officials have their expenses paid when they travel for the government, and, to go a little further, they insist that the same rule should be applied to commercial travelers, who are equally allowed their hotel bills and railroad fare. They argue that if an allowance for traveling expenses and for quarters is part of the income of an army or navy officer it is part of the income of a drummer who lives at a hotel, and they will ask the courts to so decide the question.
