Hiram Evington and family went to Portland lately from Silver City, Idaho. Sickness occurred in the family and Evington was unable to find employment. They were on the verge of starvation. One child died and the father became to the river and jumped into it to take his life, but he was rescued by a boatman. An old acquaintance persuaded Evington to go with him to prospect for mines in Southern Oregon. He consented and they found a claim which they sold for $15,000. His wife received a telegram from Dubuque, Iowa, saying Evington's brother had died, leaving him $8,000 worth of property.

Under new rules messengers are required, on coming in from a trip, to remove cartridges from their rifles and revolvers, examine the weapons and shells and report their condition.
