John R. Beasley, a Chattanooga attorney, was shot and painfully wounded by Chief Justice D. L. Snodgrass of the Tennessee supreme court, in the law office of Brown and Spurlock. A communication from Beasley appeared in the paper relative to the settlement of the state debt in 1870, and a suit brought by himself in the supreme court to test the validity of that settlement, in which strong language was used. Judge Snodgrass met Beasley in the lawyers' office and denounced the article as an infamous lie. Beasley reiterated the truth of his statements and they came to blows. During the scrap Judge Snodgrass drew his pistol and fired twice. One bullet struck Beasly in the elbow, inflicting a wound which will destroy the usefulness of his arm. The judge surrendered to the sheriff and gave bonds for his appearance.

rresident Bowen of the Textile Manufacturers' association of the South and West has issued a call for a conference at Chicago to be held on Jan. 14. Difficulties of the present trade situation will be considered. The call in part says: "Manufacturers are forced to contend with continuously declining markets. Imports of certain competitive foreign goods are largely increasing and our manufacturers are compelled to reduce their prices materially in order to compete with the low-priced productions of European and Asiatic countries, the commerce of which is realizing great advantage in our markets by reason of exchange in silverusing countries, the great reduction in our tariff rates and the repeal of our reciprocity laws, and as a result we are brought face to face with new and untried conditions.
