Lloyd Montgomery, who was on trial at Albany for the murder of D. B. Mc-Kercher, was found guilty of murder in the first degree; the jury deliberating and hour and a half. Practically no defense was attempted, except that defendant was temporarily deranged. The committee of physicians thought him sane, thought he was sane when the murders were committed. One of the committee thought he had feigned insanity at the Linn county jail and the other two thought that it was epilepsy. The court fixed the death penalty to be inflicted January 31. Mont-gomery was not tried for the murder of his father and mother, though his conviction on one enarge will not prevent his being tried on the other counts. The owner of a phonograph was admitted to see Montgomery. He told him if he would make a confession into the instrument he would exhibit it and pay half of the proceeds to the prisoner's brothers and sisters. The condemned boy has asked permission of the sheriff to do this.

There was an electrical storm in the vicinity of Tillamook last week. Lightning struck a number of trees and also the public school buildings, and in every case was accompanied by tremendous crashes of thunder. At the school building balls of fire rolled around promiscuously in every room, causing a panic among the school children. More than half a dozen children were burned, causing blisters, and the clothing on several were burned more or less, and a number had to be carried home. The physicians were busy for a while, but, strange to say, no serious consequences resulted except to Charlie Peterson's little girl, who is still in bed, suffering from several well-defined burns, and severe nervous prostration. The same phenomenon was noticed in several dwelling houses, and several cases of electrical burnings are reported. Lightning came into the telegraph office, but did little damage there. Nothing like it was ever seen before, so all say, and it seems the whole locality was pervaded with the peculiar electrical demenstration. The storm was followed by a very low ba-
