Fend Settled by Marriage.

A feud lasting over ten years, in which blood was twice spilled, once on a church step, has ended by the marriage of William Hyland and Jessie Potter at Maidstone, Ont. A decade ago William began to court Jessie, and her parents seriously objected, even to the point of kicking Hyland from the house, setting the dog at him, blazing away at him with a shotgun, and later attacking him on the church steps. The church, even, was divided on the affair: families were set against each other, and two or three court cases grew out of it. Hyland had perseverance and Jessie was constant, and, despite the combinations of clubs, shotguns and fierce dogs, they succeeded in ending their ten years' courtship. When Jessie's father and brother heard of the ending they decided that Hyland had fairly won his bride, and sent land had fairly won his bride, and sent word to him to come over to the house, that all was forgiven. Maidstone people are singing psalms of rejoicing over the happy culmination of the long fight.
