The new electric street railway of Santa Barbara, was opened for traffic a few days ago. On the first day, the first car was in charge of Miss Hattie K. Miller, daughter of the president of the road, who operated the motor without assistance.1

Miss Emily House, who has taught school for thirty-two years, told her pupils in Troutdale, Oregon, that a popular United States history was a lie, a delusion and a snare. This was strongly objected to and efforts were made to depose her from her position as teacher. The door of the school house was locked but Miss House broke it in, and opened school. She was arrested for trespass, and retaliated by suing Andrew Heun, a school director for defamation of character. She asked $20,000 damages and the Circuit Court awarded her $200.

He Got the Quarter.

He had deposited his ticket in the box on the down town station of the Sixth avenue "L" road at Fiftieth street and was counting his change in a search for plugged dimes and nickels. A quarter fell from his hands and rolled along the platform until it lodged under the raised steps which form the edge of the platform. There it lay in plain view, but as unobtainable as the golden apples of Hesperides. The loser was the picture

"I don't care about the blame coin," first thing will be to cut prices. Next be wailed. "I've got 'em to burn, but summer less than $2 a ton will be it just makes me mad to see that quarter there, and I can't get it." "Gimme a dime, mister," said a

The Magnetism of Rome.

The attraction of such a church as is that of Rome is partially, no doubt, an imaginative attraction, but not purely one of the imagination. Even Dr. Martineau, whose point of view has been so different that he regards apostolic authority itself as by no means final, has described the Church of Rome as "the missionary of nations, the associate of history, the patron of art, the vanquisher of the sword." And yet he would admit no final authority at all in the dogmatic decisions of a church which he so describes and would make very light of his episcopal lineage. Newman and Manning were neither of them overwhelmed by the more imaginative grandeur of the church's history. But they both came to believe that no one generation of Christians could rightly emancipate themselves from the guidance of all previous generations of Christians on the strength of a new study of the Scripture or a just indignation at the depth of some of the practical corruptions of the church.

They were in search of an authority at once in lineal connection with the ble life and energy at the present day. They thought that the Anglican church could hardly claim anything like continuity with the church of the apostles, and that the Greek church could hardly claim sufficient independence of state life, or, indeed, sufficient vitality and energy, to mark it out as an institution of the first order of originality and influence at the present day.-London Spectator.
