

MONEY IN WILD HOGS.

Round-Up of Razorbacks in the Southwest an Exciting Event.

The Staked Plains Afford Excellent Feeding Ground for Large Numbers of the Porkers.

While it is generally accounted that the sheep and Angora goat furnish most of the revenues to the ranchers in the broken and wooded country south of the Staked Plains and west of the Colorado river, it is nevertheless a fact that the razor-back hog contributes a full share. Probably there is no country anywhere better adapted to the production of cheap pork. The hills are covered with cedar and a great variety of scrub-oak trees, and the canyons and river valleys are heavily wooded with pecan and Spanish walnut, so that there is always an abundance of excellent mast, and it might be mentioned that the cedar berries are considered equal to corn in lard producing qualities, says the Kansas City Journal.

With this sort of feed, which is always abundant, the expense of care and feeding is removed, the animals simply roaming at large over the country, so that the only outlay required is that of the first cost of a few head for a start. Running loose in this way they are not subject to the diseases common to the hog in the sty or feed lot, and being excellent fighters they hold their own with the wolves and other wild animals which prey on the sheep and goats. Thus they multiply very rapidly.

In order to get the benefit of the increase in his stock, however, it is necessary for the rancher to get his mark on the pigs. As this, owing to the roughness of the country and the wildness of the hogs, is no small task, it is generally the custom for all the hog owners in a given section to turn out together, with their dogs, and practically "round up" the range.

Compared with one of these "hog hunts" a cattle "round up" is a quiet and commonplace affair. On the morning appointed the dogs are turned loose and started out on a hog trail, and the men ride after them just as on a wolf chase. As the pigs cannot hold out very long one of them is soon caught and the squeals bring back the rest of the bunch to his aid. As soon as the pig is free the sows form a circle around the pig from which they now and then dash out at their tormentors, and all the while grunting like the rattling of a hundred old wagons. By the time the uproar has reached its full height the hunters ride up and hiss the dogs on to seize the sows. When one is caught two men go to the assistance of the dog, one with a club to beat off the other hogs, the other with a bit of rope to tie the one seized. When all of them have thus been put out of the way of fighting, the pigs are caught and marked. Then the sows are given their liberty and the dogs started out on a new trail. When it happens that there are hogs belonging to several different men the pigs are simply divided.

While the work of "marking" is more like sport than labor, it is not less exciting than that of getting the hogs ready for market, for as it is impossible to drive them any distance—even to the corrals of the ranches—it is necessary simply to butcher them out in the hills.

So along in the early part of the winter, after the new mast has fallen and the hogs are as fat as they will get, the ranchers load their wagons with salt, grab, kettles and lard cans, take their dogs and Winchester and strike out for the hills. They make camp near some spring or water hole and then begin the work of "killing," which includes the rendering of the lard and salting of the meat. It is like a great hunt. Whenever a wagon load of lard and meat has been put up it is taken to the nearest ranch and left there until the "killing" season is over; then it is loaded again and freighted to the nearest railroad point, where it is sold at the market price.

It is said that only one man in that country ever tried driving his hogs to market. That was "Uncle" Ben Pepper, who lives a few miles above Junction City, on the South Llano river. He had, he supposed, about 300 head of fat hogs, and the idea of that "killing" worried him. So he hired all the men in the country, got all the dogs in Kimble and Edwards counties, and rounded up all the hogs to be found. It was, of course, impossible to keep the herd together, and as it scattered Ben ordered his men to separate a little and keep moving toward Kerrville.

At noon on the fourth day the line was within half a mile of the Guadalupe river, the men were half a mile apart and every dog worn out. Then Ben decided that he would like to know how many hogs he had, as after passing the Guadalupe it would be impossible to see them in the open again. So he ordered the ends of the line to swing in and close up toward the river. It was nearly sunset when the circle was completed and he climbed into a tall pecan so as to get a better view of the hogs when they should come swarming out into the river. He watched intently until night was falling, and then he saw a lean old sow emerge from the bushes and go down to drink and a moment later the drivers began coming out. He nearly fell out of the tree. He has never tried driving since.

WAR IN THE TRANSVAAL.

LONDON, June 5.—Lord Roberts today announced the capture of the imperial yeomanry by the Boers near Lindley. His dispatch is as follows:

"PRETORIA STATION, June 5.—I regret to report that the Thirtieth imperial yeomanry had to surrender to a very superior force of the enemy on May 31, near Lindley. On receiving information of the battalion being attacked I ordered Methuen to proceed with all speed to their assistance.

"Methuen was then on the march on the Heilbron side of Kroonstad, and, half an hour after the receipt of my telegram, on June 1, he started off. By 10 A. M. of the following day he had marched 44 miles in 25 hours, but he was too late to rescue Colonel Spragg's yeomanry. Methuen met the Boers who were between 2000 and 3000 strong, and after a running fight of five hours completely routed the enemy.

LONDON, June 8.—The war office has received the following dispatch from General Buller:

YELLOW BOOM FARM, June 8.—On June 6 General Buller, with the Tenth brigade and the South African Light Horse, seized Van Wyke hill. The enemy made some resistance and a good deal of sniping occurred. Our casualties were about four killed and 13 wounded.

"During that day and the following we got two 4.7 and two 12-pounder naval guns on the Van Wyke hill and two five-inch guns on the southeastern spur of Inkwelo. Under cover of their fire, Hildyard today assaulted all the spurs of the Berg between Botha's Pass and Inkwelo.

"The attack, which was well planned by Hildyard and carried out with immense dash by the troops, for whom no mountains were too steep, outflanked the enemy, who were forced to retire from their very strong position. I think we did not have any casualties, and I hope I have obtained a position from which I can render Laing's Nek untenable."

LONDON, June 11.—The Boers have torn up 24 miles of Lord Roberts' vital line of railway between America Sidling and Roodeval. It is a bold raid and vexatious, but it does not disquiet the military authorities as yet, for they expect General Kelly-Kenny to drive off the marauders and to reopen the line. The rapidity of the advance of Lord Roberts cannot have permitted him to accumulate large reserves of stores. Therefore an interruption of the railway even for a week must embarrass the army and may bring operations to a temporary standstill.

ISOGG, June 7.—The Boers have replied in rather curt terms to General Buller's proposal that if they wish to surrender it must be unconditionally, and an artillery duel is now proceeding.

LOHTENBURG, June 7.—General Hunter's advance column occupied Ventersdorp today, the Boers quietly surrendering in small bodies. Considerable plundering had been done. Mahon's column has rejoined Hunter.

NEW YORK, June 4.—A cable to the Sun, dated Pretoria, June 1, via Lourenço Marques, June 3, says: "Marvelous reorganization and rallying of the Burghers has been taking place all over the districts. President Kruger's unnecessary and precipitate flight to Lydenburg and the taking away of gold bullion which was intended for coinage, and leaving the majority of the officials unpaid, engendered a deep feeling of anger among the burghers. The Krugers assumed the powers of government, and acting on his discretion the capital may be defended. Five thousand men have left St. Anderson in the southeast corner of the Transvaal for the Free State with the object of cutting the British lines of communication."

In an address to the burghers one of the leading Transvaalers said that with God's help the hour was yet coming when Great Britain would yet acknowledge the independence of the two republics, as a tremendous change had come over the situation in regard to the war.
