Death of S. Rosenthal.

Last Sunday morning, about 11:30 o'clock, Simeon Rosenthal, the pioneer clothing merchant of Medford, was found dead in his rooming apartment in the rear of his store, in this city. The discovery of his body was made by I. L. Hamilton and J. D. Scharff, a commercial traveler in the employ of a Portland wholesale establishment. Mr. Scharff, who has known Mr. Rosenthal intimately for several years, spent the early part of Saturday evening with him, and on going to the hotel arranged to meet him Sunday morning. At the hour agreed upon, 9:30, he went to the front entrance and finding the door still locked, shook it several times to apprise Mr. Rosenthal of his presence. Not receiving a response he left, but returned shortly and again tried to gain an entrance. This he repeated several times, and finally concluded that he was ill, as he had complained during the evening previous, of not feeling well. He also noticed that the morning papers, which Mr. Rosenthal always read early, had been taken inside. Mr. Scharff went to the hotel and suggested to Mr. Hamilton that they should investigate the cause of the non-appearance of Mr. Rosenthal, as no one could be found who remembered having seen him during the day, something unusual, as he had always been an early riser. Together they went to the rear window of the building, and upon looking inside saw his dead body in a kneeling posture, one arm resting on the sofa and the other on a trunk. They immediately gave the alarm, and County Coroner, Dr. E. B. Pikel, was called, who at once took charge of the remains, and at 2 o'clock Sunday afternoon, empaneled a coroner's jury and held an inquest over the remains. After viewing the body, and inquiring into the circumstances of the discovery of the body, as related above, the jury, composed of F. O. Hurd, W. T. York, J. H. Beussem, Frank Amann, L. T. Porter and D. Brooks, returned a verdict attributing his death to natural causes, and assigned heart failure as the immediate cause of his death. Just how long he had been dead could not be ascertained without a post mortem examination. No one could positively assert that he had been seen since Saturday evening, although T. W. Johnson thinks that he saw him about 6 o'clock Sunday morning, when he drove through the street on his way to the brewery to secure his ice for Sunday delivery. While quite certain, he could not swear to the statement, and the time of his death is entirely conjectural. His regular Sunday morning bath had been prepared, and from the condition of his body it is thought that he had arisen at his regular time and was in the act of disrobing for his bath when he was stricken. A nephew of the deceased, residing at San Francisco, was notified at once by telegraph, and acting upon orders received from him, the body was taken in charge by I. A. Webb, the undertaker, and by him embalmed and prepared for shipment to San Francisco for interment, which was done Monday evening. As stated above, Mr. Rosenthal was one of the first merchants to engage in business in Medford, having come here when Medford was only a townsite, with a few scattering houses. He was a member of the I. O. O. F. lodge, of this city, under whose direction his body was shipped to San Francisco. Mr. Rosenthal was engaged quite extensively in the mercantile trade. In addition to his large clothing establishment at this place he owned a general merchandise store at Gold Hill, which has been under the management of Oris Crawford, of that place. He also owns the two story brick building which he occupied. He had not been enjoying good health for a number of months, and at the time of his death was making preparations to go to San Francisco for treatment. His sudden demise is a matter of universal regret, and his familiar figure will be greatly missed by his old time friends and associates, all of whom esteemed him very highly. Just what disposition will be made of his business affairs is not known at this time, but his relatives will probably take charge of them. Mr. Rosenthal was thought to be about seventy-five years of age, but Mr. Scharff testified at the coroner's inquest that he told him Saturday evening that his age was sixty-seven years.

They Are Not "Worthless Loafers."

Someone has been jollying Game Warden Quimby again. Some Southern Oregon humorists seem to take especial delight in stirring him up with tales of flagrant violations of the game laws, which on investigation prove to have no other foundation than the imagination of the writer. It is to be regretted, it is true, that violations of the game laws do occur in this section, but no more so, we opine, than in any other part of the state; but Southern Oregon seems to have more active correspondents to report these doings, while other parts of the commonwealth excel in malefactors.

In the Evening Telegram of the 14th an article appears stigmatizing the members of the forest reserve force of Southern Oregon as "about the worst gang of worthless loafers that could be gathered together," and laying all sorts of violations of the game laws at their door. This accusation comes in the form of a communication from one of the aforesaid humorists to Mr. Quimby, and, of course, given out by him for publication. For several months past articles have appeared from time to time in the Telegram, evidently emanating from the office of the state game warden, concerning the game laws and infringements thereof; and in but very few of these articles has there failed to appear some sort of derogatory reference to the condition of affairs in Southern Oregon. This section of the state seems to be a bete noire to that office. The people of Southern Oregon are law abiding as a rule; we haven't any more citizens residing at Salem at the state's expense than other sections of like population, and it naturally makes us a little hot when we are held up to the consideration of the world as a community of deer-skinners, and the only government employes from our ranks called a "worthless gang of loafers."

Now about these loafers. We are acquainted with all the rangers from Jackson County, either personally or by repute, and have taken pains to ascertain from reliable sources the character of those from other counties. Below is the result:

J. C. McCully, of Jacksonville, is a descendant of one of the pioneer families of Southern Oregon, a graduate of Willamette university, and has filled a number of important positions with credit to himself and friends. Henry Ireland, of Jacksonville, is a carpenter and works at that trade or anything else he can find to do during the time out in the forest. I. J. Carson, of Central Point, is also a carpenter and supports a large family by his labor. J. R. Wick, of Ashland, is one of the most respected citizens of that city, has held the position of deputy sheriff of Jackson County, and resigned that of chief of police of Ashland to go to the forest. W. G. Kropke, of Ashland, is a man of some means, engaged in business in the Grand city, but compelled on account of his health to be in the mountains most of the summer months. He is active, energetic and by no means a loafer. Harry Langell is a son of Supervisor Langell and has made his own way from choice since he was yet in his teens. J. H. Wheeler, of Ft. Klamath, is an industrious stock raiser and a farmer of that section, and a man who called him a "worthless loafer" to his face would very likely have troubles of his own. J. F. Van Zile, of Roseburg, is a farmer and a respected citizen of that community. A. S. Ireland, of Olinda, Douglas County, is one of the prominent stock raisers of that section and no one has a better reputation. S. C. Bartrum, of Roseburg, is also a farmer and fruit grower and inquiry in his home city will show what kind of a man he is.

Of these men, but two, McCully and Kropke, are single; the balance support their families by the product of their exertions, a thing which "loafers" are not prone to do.

It is well, perhaps, that the name of Mr. Quimby's informant as to the worthlessness of these gentlemen was concealed, otherwise he might have been favored with several very painful interviews.

We have not mentioned above J. D. Fay, who was a ranger until this year, and is now employed on THE MAIL. Nobody ever saw him loafing to any extent around this shop and if he was worthless he couldn't hold his job.

These men are all enthusiastic supporters of regulations for the preservation of game, and to accuse them of open violation thereof, is to say that which is untrue. We would suggest, as a friend, to Mr. Quimby, that he do more prosecution of Southern Oregon game law violators in the courts and less through the newspapers.

It is an indisputable fact that for the past three years the valley has been almost entirely free from smoke in summer, showing a diminution of forest fires, while before we eboked from July to October. Someone must have been doing something to bring this about.

A Ten P. M. Cure.

The list of marvelous cures which Dr. Darrin has been making continues to increase. Here is one who was cured at 10 o'clock Monday night.

To the Editor:—I came in from my work on the Fish Lake ditch Monday to file on a home-lead, and heard some one speak of Dr. Darrin and the great cures he is making. I was totally deaf in one ear and partially so in the other, so I called on the doctor. In less than 20 minutes I was entirely cured and I can hear as well now as I ever did in my life. I want you to publish this and send a marked copy to my father at Thayer, Kansas. He has been deaf 15 years and I want him to know he can be cured, and I know he will come here and see Dr. Darrin. I can be referred to at Brownsboro.

Native Sons of Oregon.

The meeting of the Grand Cabin of the Native Sons of Oregon was held in Portland last week, ending Thursday evening. The meeting was well attended and considerable important business was transacted. The question of consolidating with the Grand Cabin of Native Daughters was voted upon, resulting in the defeat of the proposition. Grand First Vice President A. E. Reames, of Jacksonville, was elected grand president for the ensuing year, the honor going to him without opposition. Mr. Reames has been very active in the councils of the order since its organization, and the honor conferred upon him is a fitting recognition of his past services. The other officers elected are: Past grand president, Sol Blumauer, of Portland; grand 1st vice president, Chas. T. Belcher, Portland; grand 2d vice president, Alex. Sweek, Portland; grand secretary, F. H. Saylor, Portland; grand treasurer, R. W. Hoyt, Portland; orator, C. W. Parrish, Burns; historian, E. R. Drake, Silverton. Dr. J. M. Keene, of this city, was elected as one of the grand trustees.
