San Francisco, Sept. 15.—With her decks curered with ashes from the forest fires which have been sweeping through the woods of Washington an Oregon, the steamer Umatilia came into port yesterday from Puget Sound. For three hours on September 12 the sun was obscured from view and the steamer's lights had to be kept burn-ing. The sky overhead was red and the sea was dyed a hright crimson the captain and passengers were at a loss to explain the furid appearance of the sky and not uptil port was reached was the cause of thephenom-

HE GETS A BIG ONE ON THE LARGE TOE OF HIS RIGHT FOOT.

His Wife and a Rasor Play a Lead ing Part In Trying to Remove It. Tries to Pare It Himself.

(Convright, 1902 by C. B. Lewis 1 HEN Mr. Bowser arrived home from the office the other evening, he found home from the office the other evening, he found Mrs. Rowser and the cat awaiting him on the front steps, but he passed them with an ley glare and entered the hall and flung his hat on

"Has-has anything gone wrong to day?* timidiy asked Mrs. Bowser.
"Nothing except that I have been walking on the edge of my own grave!" be bluntly replied.

"Did you just escape an awful accident ?" "No matter. I shall have something to say to you after dinner."

The dinner was a brief one, but while it lasted Mrs. Bowser felt cold chills go over her. She couldn't recall that TELL ME HOW THAT CORN CAME THERE!" she had eloped, broken a window, burned too much gas, sold any of the kitchen coal or been extravagant with halrpins, but that she was to be bauled over the coals she could not doubt. She determined to die bravely, however, and as soon as they had passed upstairs she asked:

"Well, now, what is it?"

Mr. Bowser sat down and slowly untied his shoe and pulled it off, and the stocking slowly followed. Then he rested his bare foot on a chair, worked his big toe back and forth till it cracked, and, pointing his finger, he hoarsely whispered:

"A corn-a thundering big corn on the bottom of that toe!"

"Is that all?" laughed Mrs. Bowser in her great relief. "Why, I thought something dreadful had happened." "Yes, a corn," he went on as he continued to point—"a corn that has made life a hades for me all day long. And how did it come there? Look me in the face, if you can, and tell me how that corn came there!"

"The same as any corn comes, of course. You ran the heel of your shoe over, and the pressure on that toe

"Woman, I don't want any nonsense over this matter!" warned Mr. Bowser as he drew up his leg. There won't be. Let your foot down and hold still."

"Should you attempt to cripple me for life by giving my foot a swipe with that razor you must take the consequences!

"I will. Now, I'll take your toe in this hand and the razor in this and"—

Mrs. Bowser got up and drove the cat down into the basement, and after considerable delay Mr. Bowser leaned back in his chair and shut his teeth hard and closed his eyes. It was a light, deft bend that wielded the razor, and the corn was all ready to be annihilated, but at the first touch of steel he winked his toes and opened in Tunis.-Pictorial Magazine, his mouth to say:

"I don't believe I can stand it. If that razor slips and cuts me, I'm in for case of blood poisoning and a horrible death. I'll wait till tomorrow and go to a regular corn doctor."

"There will be no slip and no blood poisoning," replied Mrs. Bowser. "All you've got to do is to hold still for five minutes. I am always cutting corns off my own feet. Do have a little grit about you."

"Grit! Grit! Woman, don't talk to me about grit! You have seen me sit and have fourteen teeth yanked out without uttering a groan. I know the dangers of blood poisoning, however. What are you doing?"

"I'm going to pare off your corn."
"You let it alone. I'll see about it tomorrow. I don't propose to put my life in your hands. Stop that, I say!" "And you won't let me pare your orn off?" asked Mrs. Bowser as she Still held on to the toe.

"No, never! Woman, don't you dare to fool with me! You can take your-self upstairs, and if I think it best I'll whittle away at the corn myself. If I bring about my own death, there's nobody else to blame. That old cat has come up again. Take her along with you, or I'll slice her blamed head off!" Mrs. Bowser vacated without argument, picking up the cat as she went, and Mr. Bowser dropped his foot back into the bath and shivered over his narrow escape. After about a quarter of an hour, however, his nerve began to return, and he wiped off his foot and decided to begin operations. He did it in a very gingerly manner, as if shaving his chin for the first time, but he had not made over five cuts at the corn when Mrs. Bowser heard a wild yell, followed by a heavy galloping around the room.

"What on earth is it?" she asked as she came flying downstairs to find Mr. Bowser hopping about on one foot. "Send for the doctor!" he shouted in

Mr. Bowser had come home with his mind fully made up to stick to it that it was all Mrs. Bowser's fault and to give her a very uncomfortable hour over it, but he suddenly realized that he had no case. He didn't want to let go all at once, however, and so he growlingly observed:

"I have heard of wives filling their husbands' shoes with sand to get revenge on them, and I warn you that I propose to sift this matter to the bottom before I get through. By thunder, but it hurts! I shall probably be laid up for six or eight weeks with it, and

"Will-will it he a case of blood poi soning?" was tremblingly asked as he was ready to go.

"No," he gravely replied. "Nobody ever heard of a donkey being afflicted with such an ailment!" And when he had departed Mr. Bow

A TRYING ORDEAL.

Fattening Process of a Mar-riagonale Girl in Tunis.

The marriageable girl in Tunts has a trying ordeal to go through after her betrothal to the man not of her choice, but whose choice she is. She has to be fattened to the required size before the ceremony can take place.

As soon as the betrothal bakes place she is taken to a room and there cooped up till the fattening process is concluded. Silver shackles are fastened round her wrists and ankles, and the task of her parents and future husband is to increase her bulk till her wrists and ankles fill up the shackles. If the husband is a widower or has "discharged" his first wife, the girl has the shackles of the first placed on her, and she must fill them of the bargain or waive the condition In the case of a bachelor he takes care to see that the bracelets and anklets are not too large-that is, if he is fond of the girl-but if he is being forced into the marriage by his parents, he is a great stickler for custom. Stout girls are the more quickly snapped up Alexandrian Scientists. Among the great scientists of the Alexandrian school, or, rather, mathematicians, were Pappus, one of the greatest of ancient mathematicians; Theon, and his unfortunate daughter, the famous Hypatin—who appears to have been a better mathematician than her father-the story of whose life and tragic death is familiar through Kings ley's navel. Unfortunately none of her works is extant. She was the last of the Alexandrian philosophers who at tained any fame. She lived about 415 A. D.

Not only is this old university renowned for the impulse which it gave to science, but it also extended its protection and aid to literature, poetry and the fine arts. For example, Ptolemy Philadelphus did not consider it beneath him to count among his personal friends the poet Callimachus, the author of a treatise on birds, who honorably maintained himself by keeping a school at Alexandria. Among the most distinguished poets may be mentioned Lycophron, whose work "Cassandra" still remains, and Theocritus, whose exquisite bucoffes prove how sweet a poet he was,
