GOVERNMENT WILL NOT EXPEL PRINCESS LOUISE.

Geneva. Dec. 29,-Newspapers here say that the state government has re-fused the request of the German legtslation to expel the Crown Princess of Saxony from Switzerland.

Vienna, Dec. 29.—According to an interview published here Archduke. Leopold has refused to sign a renunclation of his rights as an Austrian subject. Emperor Francis Joseph in sists that the archduke resign every thing and never return to Austria. The archdoke claims the payment of his appendage and declares that will take every legal step to fight against exile. He says he will never abandon his rights as an Austrian sub ject.

Brussels, Dec. 29 .- The Petit Bleu published M. Giron's own story hee of his relations with the crown princess of Saxony, in which he admits the paternity of her sixth child.

Next Struggle of Miners' Union.

Chicago-West Virginia promises to be the next scene of action for President John Mitchell and his lieutenants of the United Mine Workers, For years the operators have threatened the miners' union, and backed up by courts and injunctions have been steadily grinding the miners down with oppression. President Mitchell says that the rights of the miners in West Virginia will be demanded and intimates that a great struggle is to be held there soon.

Unconscious From Croup.

During a sudden and terrible attack of croup our little girl was unconscious from strangula tion, says A. L. Spanord, postmaster, Chester Mich., and a dose of One Minute Cough Cure was administered and repeated often. It re-duced the swelling and inflammation, cut the ruccus and shortly the child was resting easy and speedly recovered. It cures Coughs, Colds LaGrippe, and all Throat and Lung troubles One Minute Cough Cure lingers in the throat and chest and enables the lungs to contribute pure, health giving exygen to the blood. "What did you have to go and pick out this pler for?" complained the watchman. "You're only making me trouble."

"Man is born to trouble as the sparks fly upward," quoted the man, "This was the nearest one," he added. He was panting a little.

"You'd never got a-past me if-if"-"If you hadn't been taking a little nap," suggested the man. "Well, it's a good night for"-he paused, glancing down at the dark river, silvered over with the wayy radiance of the moon light-"for sleep." The watchman shuddered. "You ain't really going to do it," he said entreat ingly and edged forward. The com and open of the employed him was opposed to sulcides off its plers.

 "Don't come any nearer now," warned the man, "unless you want to hurry me."

There was a long silence, accentuated by the nervous puffing of a belated tug far out on the river and the slapping of the little waves against the plerhead The man was leaning against a pile at the extreme end of the pier. Within arm's length of him a steamship, made fast, upreared its dark hulk. If some me would only reach out of a porthole and seize him was the wild hope of the watchman. The man straightened up and stretched himself.

"Pardon this natural hesitation," he said lightly. "It is time I went." "Hold on." cried the watchman

"Don't-don't-don't he in a hurry!" It was the best he could do on the spur of the moment. The man laughed, but he paused. Desperately the watchman groped for something-anything to say. But the power of light and genial con-versation, which is a special gift of those who watch by night, had gone from him.

"What do you want to do it for, anyay?" he finally burst out. "I'm a justifiable suicide," replied the way?"

"I'm glad to see you sit down," o served the man, "because now 1 ne not watch you so closely for fear ymight make a rush. If you did"-h glanced again at the swift water "we'd both go, and I wouldn't like f take you from a steady Job." The watchman caught at the la-words. "Maybe you're out of work. it's that, I know a job I might get yo tomorrow."

"I dou't reckon I shall be a candidat for any job tomorrow, thank you," sale the man grimly. "Oh!" said the watchman blankly.

Obviously he had got on the wrong track. He tried another. "If it's from being broke"

"That reminds me," interrupted the other. He pulled a handful of bills out of his pocket and hid them on a plank. "There are several dollars there. I shall not need them where I'm going. The money may be of some use to you if you don't mind using a dead man's wealth.'

"It wouldn't hardly be lucky, would it?" failtered the watchman. "Most people aren't so squeamish about legacies. Don't worry; I won't haunt you?" "Maybe it's a woman that's the trouble," pursued the watchman desperately, having struck another trail.

"What's that you're doing?" the man demanded suspiciously, "Just throwing away my plug of tobacco. Ain't you going to tell me it straight?" The man pondered. There was ;

splashing sound from below hardly to be distinguished from the wash of the ripples, and in the watchman's attitude a certain alertness. "Don't try any tricks." the man said,

"unless you want to hasten matters." "Right across the end," said the watchman sharply. The man stared. "I guess you're a little queer yourself," he remarked, "But as you're polite enough to be in-terested, I'll tell you this much. It's a case of a woman." "That's what I thought," said the watchman cagerly. "But don't you let it knock you out this way. Brace

"It's no use," said the man quietly, "There's no help for this." "Is she dead?"

"Worse," replied the man. "Geel" said the watchman. "That's tough. Tough!" he repeated, and there was honest sympathy in his voice. "Yes," said the man dispassionately.

"It is, rather. I'd been away for a year and when I came back-well, I found What's that?" out.

The tread of feet on the far end of the pier fell on his car. He peered anxiously back, half turning.

"I must be going," he said, "Look behind you," said the watchman The man whirled around, facing the river. Across the end of the pier float-ed a rowboat, held in place by two men, who paddled gently. The watch-man's whistle sounded its keen, rattling note.

"You can't do it." he said to the man. "They'll catch you if you jump; whar' rats and can swim like fish."

The flooring of the pier was now vibrating with the heavy impact of swift feet. With a cry the man made a rush for the unprotected side of the pler, but the watchman intercepted and grappled him.

"Help!" he shouted as they both fell. They were locked tightly together when the police reached them.

"This gentleman." panted the watch-man as he got to his feet, "has been 'has been drinking some and was walking off the end of the dock"

Writing of the early days of California's prosperity, Mr. H. A. Vachell says: "The outward and visible sign of this amazing prosperity was most manifest in the houses (they were always spoken of as residences) which, like Aladdin's palace, seemed to be built and furnished in a single night. "On one occasion I was in a Pullman car, and we were passing through a valley dotted with most unsightly houses-ramshackle buildings, for the most part, each an amalgam of half a dozen styles of architecture and each

How It Was darred by an Applicant Looking For Work.

M. E. Ingalis, prominent in railroad affairs in the middle west, has a rule that callers must send in their names from an outer office and await his summons if he desires to admit them. It is told of bia that not a great while ago the rule was ignored by a stranger. who swung wide the door, let it close with a bang and jerkily said; "Ingalls, In?"

"I am Mr. Ingalls," replied the rall road man, his choler rising. "So?" queried the stranger. "Letter for you." "And he handed over an envelope.

When Mr. Ingalis had read the con tents, he appeared surprised and asked: "Do you know what this says?" "Yep," replied the stranger; "s station agent in our town said you'd give me a job if I brought that to you."

"Indeed," commented Ingalls fronte-lly, "Well, do you not think your ally. chances would be better if you at least knocked before entering, removed your hat when you entered and asked for Mr. Ingalls' instead of merely 'Ingalls?

The stranger looked discomfited, reached for the letter and slowly left. Before Ingails recovered from his surprise there was a knock on the door and, responding to his "Come in," the stranger re-entered softly, removed his hat and gently inquired: "Is Mr. Ingalis in, sir?"

The magnate, deeply impressed with the fact that his little lecture had produced quick results, said cheerily: Yes, my friend; I am he. What can

I do for you?"

I do for you?" "Do for me?" came the answer. Then, louder: "Do for me? You can go to the devil for me, you baldhended lit-tle duffer? That's what you can do?" And he departed, slamming the door.

it turns out. I knew a Dutchman that lived in the same house with me, and the lady he was keeping company with threw him down. He turned on the gas, but somebody turned it off again. Say, in three months he was so stuck on another lady that he was talking about killing himself again."

Woman Doesn't Obey Rules, In spite of their historic solidurity, in

The baffled watchman rubbed his spite of the powerful and binding in head painfully and patiently tried fluence of their common womanhood and in spite of all the thoughts and feelings in which they share, I doub whether such a thing as friendship it its very highest sense can ever exis between two women, for the essentia elements of friendship are unbesitatin confidence and unswerving loyalty, an these are precisely the two things which can never by any possibility be given by one woman to another.

Honor, in the man's understanding of this word, is something that has no existence in a woman's nature. While the loves and while she cares, she will be loval with a lovalty that neither suffering nor disgrace nor death itself can shake, but that higher loyalty which is faithful even to those wrong it-in this no woman has a share.-Rafford Pyke in Cosmopolitan.
