Bowser's One Day

(Copyright, 1963, by C. B. Lewis,)

HEN Mr. Howser had finish ed breakfast the other morning he did not rush to the hall rack for his ha and get out of the house in fifteen seconds. To Mrs. Bowser's surprise he sat down to his cigar and seemed to have forgotten that it was a week day. She waited for ten minutes and then asked if he was going to take a day of

"That's what I'm going to do," he re-

'Are you going fishing or anything?" "No, ma'am. I'm going to stay right around the house and straighten things out. There are quite a number of things that ought to be attended to."

Mrs. Bowser didn't ask what things he meant, but awaited developments with a presentiment that the day would be made lively after his own pe cuilar style. She had not long to walt for the beginning.

One of the works of art in Mr. Row-ser's front yard is a stone dog in an at-litude of repose. The artist meant the dog to repose, and the dog had always been willing, but the hoodinus possing by had other ideas. One of their favor-ite annisements is to enter the yard and stand the dog upright, or whirt him over on his back. In order to keep peace in the family Mrs. Bowser and the cook have stood ready to turn the pence in the family Mrs. Bowser and looked Mr. Bowser over and concluded the cook have stood rendy to turn the dog lack as often as he was turned out of some widow's family, over and said nothing about it. An hour after breakfast on this particular morning three half grown boys came along and decided to stand the dog on his head. They did not reckon upon has head. They did not reckon upon anything beyond a wave of the broomstick and a mild profest from the cook, when it resisted he turned in a fire and Mr. Bowser found then serve new when it resisted he turned in a fire and Mr. Bowser found then serve new. and Mr. Bowser found them easy prey when he suddenly rushed down the front steps and upon them. Mr. Bowser had no reply,
"If a Caristian family does live here," continued the traing, as he partly opened the gate, "then I want to say. that I haven't had anything to eat for two whole days, and I'm going to apply for a crust of bread. If there are no crusts lying around I'll take a dime in-

"I'll come in, boss, and talk things over with you," he said as he entered the yard. "It's not my fault that I'm down. I used to own the nicest mill-dam you ever saw, but when the mill-dam trust got to going it froze." dam trust got to going it froze

That was all be said about the mill That was all he said about the mili-dams. Mr. Bowser rose up and tackled him and played horse with him, and when he got out of the yard and around the corner he didn't have breath enough left to tell a policeman whether he had been run over by an lee wagou or knocked sky high by a sewer extraction. sewer explosion.

The next caller was the leeman. His wagon rattled up in a jovial way, and he seized a chunk of ice and gayly bore It to the basement door and yelled "1-e-e." at the top of his volce. His yell was still echoing among the house tops when Mr. Bowser appeared before him

Mr Bowser had hardly got over pantling from his exertions when the vegetable man called—one of the iwenty vegetable men passing through th street daily, the called from his wage on the street, from the earth-tone, from the gate, from the bosedness window. He amonoused that he fain seems pol-toes, outons, radishes, assumings a paragus and beaus and that the san

Then the basement door sussice opened, and he was looking for a cook to appear and long sat his self-load when Mr. However seemed for and began performing. He also chose the vegetable man to perform. Beer potatoes, radishes and member-durkened the air, while asparagus, oulous and beans covered the lawn and told of a bountiful harvest.

The vegetable man had been left an orphian at an early age and had learned to depend upon himself, but he was caught in the flood and swept off his feet and rolled over and over until he was clear of the yard. When he finally returned to consciousness he was sented on his wagon and was half a mile away and shouting "coal" instead of "regetables."

Mr. Bowser set on the front steps with the cat beside him when a tramp who was "working" the block espect him from across the street and deciding the had struck the select thing of the season. Coming across the street in the cat besides the season.

During the day an old cle man called and rang the front door bell for five minutes. Mr. Bowser simply threw blan minutes. Mr. Bowser simply threw thin into the mext gract. A powers man in stated that the cools call Mrs. Bowser down to use and to buy, and when she bud failed to dissonance him Mr. Bowser took bin by the arm and led bins out of the gate and warned him of the yawning chasm.

A German band got all ready to play in front of the house and go on a col-iesting four afterward, but Mr. Howser becknied to the leader and held a whis-pered conference with him, and not a toot was tooted.
