A Bad Mule.

Here is a coincidence strange enough to drive people almost to superatition:

Charles Ruddle, a remittance man from London, was killed a year ago by the kick of a mule, the snimal's hoof striking him on the jaw and with such force that the man's skull was fractured. He had been here a year when the accident occurred.

On exactly the same spot, Jeffrey Ruddle, a brother of Charles, and likewise a remittance man, was kicked in the face by the same mule last week. His jaw is shattered into bits and the base of his skull is in ioned. The surgeons say he cannot recover. This second victim has been here just a year, having come for the purpose of settling up the estate his brother after the latter died. father of the two brothers was crushed by a horse falling on him ten years ago and an uncle met with a violent death in a railway accident shortly
