Rev. Armstrong, of the Methodist church, went to Willamette Valley the first of the week. He will attend the Methodist conference. Rev. Armstrong does not expect to be re-appointed to this place, which fact is a matter of regret to his many friends in Jacksonville.

School Superintendent P. H. Daily's house came near being destroyed by fire Sunday. Mr. and Mrs. Daily were absent from home and the fire was discovered by neighbors after it had destroyed a bed and ruined quite a quantity of clothing. The fire was caused by an electric iron being left on a bed with the current turned on. Only the prompt action of members of the fire department saved the entire building from destruction. Supt. Daily estimates his loss at about $100.

His Guiding Star.

On a lonely road or trail in a lonely country, on the back of a lonely burrow, sat David Marshall and he plainly showed that he, with the other objects about him, was just a lonely, David was a queer man, twenty-three years of age and for the past two years he had traveled every trail in Arizona and had made some new ones. He had determined to be rich, he had first to be rich before he could claim to aspire to the plan he so much wished to fill. He was good looking, well educated, very industrious, but very nervous. He was not satisfied to get rich in the ordinary way, but he desired to search the bowels of the earth and find there hidden the riches he so much desired. This on his lonely trip he felt that when he reached the place in quest he would find a rich vein and startle the world. It was not the desire for money or wealth that spurred him on, but back in the mountains he always had her before him, but she was not until the five years had rolled 'round. After that he did not care. He tired not return and had sworn he would not until he could go a wealthy man. Nina had many lonely hours also. She knew but she dared not. She would wait, but she would not stroll down town, go in to see old "Shortie" Garnett's store, admire the beauty of his Toledo ranges, point out the vessels she would need, counting this and that, and had long since come to the conclusion that one did not have to be very rich to furnish a small house with fine goods if every one sold like "Shortie." She had even been saving from her spending money until she only lacked a few dollars to buy all she needed in her kitchen and if David Marshall was where she would get hold of him she home when he had graduated at his side stood Nina Beeson. Dave had never told her he loved her, but some of his friends had and Nina had confided to some of her companions that David was her hero, only he was poor. She had said to this same friend that she would remain single for five years and if David was still a poor man she would then possibly entertain some proposition made her.

David had never said one word to her or she to him, but hardly a month passed but he heard, through others, that she was just as she had left school. She often saw letters from him, written to others, and just as often wished those letters were written to her, but never said a word. On all the lonely trips he made Nina was his guiding star. When he dug would have told him so, but as long as he was riding a lonely mule on a lonely road in a lonely country like Arizona she would wait and hope, and visit "Shortie" Garnett's store.

Bearing Another Burden.

That it is not impossible to ring a new change on woman's aversion to telling her correct age has been proved by the rector of a New York church. He does not appear to be more than fifty years old, but declared to an inquiring parishioner that he was seventy-five and added, "I shall be seventy-seven my next birthday."

"The other evening," he explained, "my wife and I computed that our combined ages foot up to a hundred years. Now, of course, no lady is ever over twenty-five years old, so to keep peace in the family I suppose I must say I'm seventy-five."

"But why will you be seventy-seven your next birthday?"

"Because my wife's birthday and mine happen to fall on the same date, and"—with a sigh of resignation—"of course I shall have to shoulder both of them."

JACKSON COUNTY.

The work on the Gold Hill canal, which was interrupted last week by an injunction suit, filed by the Conductor Water & Power Co., has been resumed and will be pushed to completion.

Henry C. McNeill, a business man of Ashland, died at his home in that city Saturday evening of neuralgia of the heart, aged sixty years. He leaves a wife and two daughters, Mrs. H. H. Sizor, of Knoxville, Tenn., and Miss Floy McNeill, of Ashland.

J. P. Gilmore, a prominent citizen of Ashland, died suddenly at Deadwood, in the Dead Indian section, last week of heart disease. Mr. Gilmore was on a hunting expedition with several companions. The remains were brought to Ashland for interment.

Ashland business men were taken in last week by a smooth individual in the bunch line. This chap represented himself a seeker for land in which to invest. C. H. Gillette, a real estate man, took him driving over the country Saturday afternoon, and the drive was prolonged until after banking hours. Then the stranger found he had failed to provide himself with money for Sunday. He had money in both Ashland banks. Would Mr. Gillette cash a $10 check for him. Mr. Gillette would and did. Exit land buyer. He is still existing.

Miraculous Multiplication. A lady who recently bought a dinner service consisting of fifty-four pieces for $1.35, was informed by her housemaid the next day that the bargain had become still more wonderful, for it now consisted of 1,125 pieces.—Punch.

Disappointing. Mrs. Justelitz—Have you any hand embroidered waists? Salesman (who has waited on her before)—I'm very sorry to disappoint you, madam, but we have.—Chicago News.

Would Be More Careful. Heavy Father (violently)—Now, see here, Molly, don't let me catch you and young Dovecot flirting together in the conservatory again. Guileless Daughter (demurely)—No, father, you shan't.—Bystander.

Greatness is to take the common things of life and walk truly among them.—Schreiner.
