ADDITIONAL LOCAL. A LITTLE OF EVERYTHING

J. M. Free, of Central Point, while returning from Medford Saturday night met with an accident which came near proving serious. His team became unmanageable and ran into a large telephone pole, near I. A. Merriman's place and Mr. Free was thrown from the wagon, striking the ground with such force as to render him unconscious for an hour or more. He was discovered soon after the accident and was cared for by people living in that locality. The telephone pole which was struck by the team was broken off some distance from the ground, which fact will give some idea as to the speed of the team and the force of the collision.

The Southern Oregon Laundry Co. is doing business in the same old way—with satisfaction to all patrons. Liquid Sulphur.
At Lake Charles, near the gulf of Mexico, 200 miles from New Orleans, sulphur is obtained from deep deposits in the form of liquid. Wells driven to a depth of 800 feet in search of petroleum revealed instead a rich deposit of sulphur. To obtain the mineral hollow tubes were driven into the earth. Each sulphur well consists of three tubes, one within another. Through the outer tube hot water is forced down, and it issues through perforations near the bottom. Through the central tube hot air is driven a little lower than the points where the hot water escapes. Through the third tube, inclosed between the other two, the liquid sulphur, dissolved by the water, rises to the surface under the combined influence of the pressure of the hot water and the impulsion of the rising air. The liquid sulphur is led into wooden reservoirs where it cools and hardens.—Exchange.

BRITISH CONSOLS.

Origin and History of This Feature of English Securities.
Almost all the debt of England consists of the funded debt, so called, and the greater part of this is made up of "consols," which is an abbreviation of consolidated stocks, of which we shall every day in the papers, and the price of consols is the financial pulse of the land.

Consols were created in 1772 by statute 25 of George III, chapter 27. But no scrap of paper ever represented a consol until, to facilitate commerce, in 1870 a statute was passed allowing the government to issue certificates to represent them. The property that all the world asked the price of every day was unrepresented by any monetary securities until 1870, and even now very few certificates have been issued.

Now, this is a consol, and this is its history: Originally some one had loaned the government £100, and the government had caused his name to be entered on its books as a creditor, from whom it had received that amount and to whom some day it might, if it chose, repay it. It need never do so, but until it did it must pay him an annuity of 3—that is, he received 3 per cent on his money as long as the government chose to keep it, but the government could pay it back at any time it chose to do so. This creditor then owned a consol—that is, he owned such a debt from the government as just described.

If he wished to transfer what rights he had—that is, his 3 per cent per annum—and the right to his £100 when, if ever, the government chose to return it, he could go to the Bank of England with his transferee and receive the purchase price from him, and the stock would be transferred to the man paying the consideration, and that man's name would be placed on the government's book in the place of the former owner, and thereafter the transferee would receive the 3 a year and the £100, if it was ever paid back. But no paper passed except the receipt for the purchase money which was given by the buyer and which the bank official checked with a red mark.

These receipts were not certificates of ownership and were seldom preserved, never except for purposes of identification when the new owner went to draw his first dividend. After that they were destroyed. It is true, old times the owner of a consol was given a tally, which was nothing but a block of wood with notches on it split in two so that a portion of each notch should be on each half, and the government kept one half and the owner of the stock the other.

These showed the state of the account between the government and its creditor, but this was an antiquated system of keeping accounts, brought down from the days when writing was little known, and at last they were abolished by act of parliament and burned. There were so many of them that when they were thrown into the furnaces they became superheated, and the parliament houses burned down, which perhaps served the authorities right for keeping the antiquated system so long.
