There is no valid reason why every Republican should not support D. H. Jackson for the office of sheriff. Mr. Jackson has proven himself an able and energetic officer during his term and the enemies he has made through his official actions are such that every law-abiding citizen should prefer to become his supporter.

To the Voters of Jackson County.

Gentlemen: Having been solicited by many persons to make the race for County Treasurer this year I wish to acquaint you with who I am. My father, the late Sam. R. Taylor, came to Oregon in the early fifties. I am a native born Oregonian, 35 years of age. I have been in the employ of Mr. J. Nunan as clerk for 20 years, and am now a member of the firm of Nunan, Taylor & Co., Jacksonville. I respectfully ask your vote and assure you that should the people of Jackson county elect me to fill the office of County Treasurer that I will faithfully and honestly conduct the affairs of that office for your best interests. I have never asked for a political office in my life. Hoping that when you go to the polls to June that you will put an X in front of my name, I am,

Sincerely yours,
Marvel M Taylor,
Democratic Nominee for County Treasurer

Mrs. Temple's Telegram

At the Medford theatre Saturday evening, May 10th, the latest successful farce, "Mrs. Temple's Telegram" will have its first production in this city.

It is the usual rule for advance notices of coming attractions to be composed from the fertile brain of the clever (?) press agent but in this instance we are going to quote from the dramatic critic Mr. Arthur A. Green, of the Portland Oregonian where the play was presented last. "Mrs. Temple's Telegram" as interpreted by William Bernard and an admirable supporting company, is a deluge of mirth. It burst upon an audience that filled the theatre from orchestra to gallery three minutes after the first act began and did not abate until the last curtain fell. The professional designation of a good play as a "Screen" doesn't half begin to express it. Minute for minute and part for part I believe "Mrs. Temple's Telegram" is the funniest farce now being presented. There are few characters but each one of them is essential to a considerable degree. The complications are so exorbitantly funny and complex that at every new development one wonders if the author hasn't reached his limit for the ludicrous and if the crowd hasn't had enough spasms of laughter. But one after another the situation keeps piling up until the very close finds but a scant minute for final expansions. As a sustained piece of stage writing it is a wonder. Seats for "Mrs. Temple's Telegram" are now on sale at Haskin's Drug Store.

To the Public.

When I read in the paper that I had been nominated for county commissioner by the Socialist party, I hardly recognized my own name, having been called "Tennessee" Smith for some 27 years in Oregon. I merely make this statement so that those who care to vote for "Tennessee" Smith, well that's me.

Respectfully,
W. M. Smith

ANTI-SALOON.

Edited by the Jackson County Anti-Saloon Central Committee.

Gov. Folks Speech.

Here is what Gov. Joseph W. Folk, of Missouri says of the saloon business in his campaign speech at St. Joseph Missouri, April 24, 1908.

"It used to be said that the gambling laws, the wine-room acts and the dram shop statutes could not be enforced in the large cities. I say to you these laws are enforced and have been enforced to the letter in the cities of St. Louis, Kansas City and St. Joseph. Here the governor has the power to enforce these laws because he appoints the police commissioners in these cities and the police commissioners of the city of St. Louis. The gambling houses, once so common, is now a thing of the past, and wine-rooms have been stamped out. The law requiring saloons to close on Sunday has been flagrantly disregarded in these cities. I ordered it enforced in accordance with the oath taken when I came to the office of governor. The saloon-keepers refused at first, but they were forced to submit to the power of the law. They insisted that if the legislature were in session they would have it repealed. There has been a legislative session since this law has been put in force and no one dared come forward with even a suggestion for its repeal. The result of the enforcement of this law has been some what remarkable. Crime, that is, Sunday crime, has been largely reduced in these cities. The police courts that on Monday morning in the old days were crowded with wretched men and women recovering from their Sunday debaucheries, are now practically deserted. Whatever may be said by the advocates of the wide-open Sunday saloon, statistics show that there has been less drunkenness since the enforcement of this law than before. The business of the outer, the baker, the grocer who has no saloon attachment and the tradesman has largely increased. The deposits of working men in the banks have increased and their wages that formerly went to the Sunday saloon now go to pay for food and clothing for the family, or are saved for a rainy day. Many a wife, many a mother, has written me that they now have something to eat, and to wear on Sundays and Mondays, whereas before they were in want. One such letter from one good woman more than compensates for the curses of ten thousand outlaw liquor dealers. The saloon is an evil wherever it may exist. It is a power for good nowhere. It is only tolerated anywhere for fear something worse may take place. The question as to whether the saloons shall be run out of the state entirely is an important one, but a far more important question is whether or not the saloons have no direct authority. I believe there should be some state authority conferred to enforce the laws in every part of the commonwealth after local officials have neglected to do their duty. In this respect, however, the general assembly differed from my view, and no authority was conferred upon the governor to carry out the laws except in the cities mentioned. A drastic law, however, was enacted at the extra session of the general assembly of 1907, which is a great step in enforcing the law. Under this act each dramshop keeper must close not only on Sunday, but from 1 o'clock to 5 o'clock each night and must give bond in the sum of $2,000 that he will obey all the laws of the state relating to saloons and upon any violation any two citizens can file suit on this bond in the circuit court. A detailed official law was also enacted at the extra general assembly of 1907, whereby any citizen may file suit in the circuit court against the prosecuting attorney, sheriff, mayor or other official charged with the enforcement of the law for a neglect of duty, and in the event it can be shown that the official has willfully failed to enforce any law it is made his duty to enforce, such official can be ousted from office. The proceeding is a civil one and confers the power on the citizens of each community to rid themselves of their officials who in their public duty forsake the services of the people.

Missouri Prosperous Under Helms of Law.

In the campaign of 1904 we were told that it would injure the state to make the cure of corruption an issue, that the people outside of the state would think we were all grafters. I believed then as I do now, if corruption exists it should be dragged into the light. It can not be cured by hiding it. It is more honorable to correct civic evils than to ignore them. Has the rein of law hurt Missouri? Every part of the state is increasing in population and in wealth. Immigration has increased 25 per cent more in the past three years than in the three years before that, and lands all over the state have increased more in value during the last three years than in any ten years before. We were told that if the saloons in the cities were closed on Sunday that if race-track gambling was stopped and wine-rooms shut up, grass would grow in the streets of these cities. What has been the result? St. Louis has grown more during the past three years than in any like period in her history. There has been more new buildings put up there during that period than in any half dozen years prior. Real estate in Kansas City has advanced in value more during that time than in any ten years before. St. Joseph is rapidly forging to the fore front of American municipalities. While the Missouri idea of law enforcement may not have caused all this prosperity, it certainly has not been an injury. The ma-shall be allowed to run the state. They have been permitted to have too much influence in political affairs, and candidates whose business it would be, if elected, to make laws, have shown too much consideration for the element who have been familiar lawbreakers. Led on by designing politicians the liquor interests have entered the political arena backed by millions of dollars, with the avowed purpose of dominating the politics of the state if they can and, through politics, to control the state. While the enforcement of the law closing saloons on Sunday has now become an accepted condition, so that no candidate for office in this state would dare openly oppose this policy, their resentment against the present executive for putting the law in force against them has shown no abatement. They oppose me and I do not want their support. If I have to violate my oath of office by allowing them the privilege of lawlessness in order to be elected to any other office than I say it is a price I will not pay even to hold the highest office in the land. I prefer to retire to private life conscious of having been true to my conception of public duty than to receive the encomiums and support of lawbreakers by being false to my better nature.

The liquor interests claim that they are in favor of the law being enforced, but have they welcomed a reign of law? Not at all. On the contrary many of them attempted to defy the orders to enforce the law until they saw defiance was useless. Then they gave unwilling acquiescence while vowing vengeance on the officials who dared consider that laws were made for them to obey the same as ordinary mortals. The fact that the law was enforced against them was enough to array them against me, their theory seeming to be that they must in self-defense oppose all who want their business regulated. Some of the saloons here in St. Joseph are fighting now, not for existence, but for the privilege of lawlessness from the next administration, which they hope will allow them to open on Sunday. They will obtain no such privilege from this administration and I do not believe they will from the next. As long as the liquor traffic demonstrates that it has no respect for law, human or divine, just so long will the sentiment against it continue to grow.

Other Dramshop Laws.
The governor only has power to enforce the dramshop laws in the cities where he appoints the police commissioners and the excise commissioner, but in other portions of the state, he

Said to Have Burned Property of Ex-Congressman Williamson.
Prineville, Or., May 10.—After deliberation covering more than 15 hours, the jury in the case of C. Sam Smith, charged with burning J. N. Williamson's shooting place, brought in a verdict of guilty.

Smith was sentenced to serve four years in the penitentiary. Lawrence Elliott, his accomplice, also received a like sentence.

Counsel will move for a new trial if this is not granted, notice will be given to appeal to supreme court.

This is the first case on record in Crook county where a sherriffman has had sufficient courage to endeavor to cause the punishment of those committing depredations on his property.
