THE MINERAL WEALTH OF SOUTHERN OREGON

Entertainingly, yet with scientific accuracy, "Orro," a well-posted writer, tells of the mineral wealth of Southern Oregon and Northern California as follows: Metallurgists, mineralogists and geologists when called upon to visit localities where ores of metal abound—especially gold ores—have learned by experience some facts of value in the examination of mines. All have their pet theories, with many of them holding, that, "ore depositions are from the surface," while others equally sincere, insist that "the values have been shot up or come from below."

The mining boys in the hills assert that "gold grows," and there is perhaps some truth in the statement. We quote from Williams: "Rocks are in reality far from being dead, inert, stationary masses, which they appear to the ordinary observer. The fascinating study of chemical geology especially when aided by the microscope, shows them to be in a state of almost constant change." Mineralogical chemistry and crystallography prove that there are families of minerals as easily recognizable as are those of the animal or vegetable kingdom.

Mineralogy and geology may be classified as subjects and are not—properly speaking—true science, there being but one exact science, and that is mathematics.

The most practical geologist is the man behind the pick. Graduates from mining schools and colleges while partly equipped on chemistry and metallurgy must spend many years on mineralogy and, besides, have practical work in mines. The greater per cent of such graduates are not ashamed when called upon to take a post-graduate course—"side by each"—with the mining boys in the shaft, stope, tunnel or level.

Siskiyou county, California, has produced $150,000,000 in gold from placers and lode mines, and is still producing; with territory not even yet prospected. In the vernacular of the day that "is going some." Nevada also will "be going some" before equaling that production.

Northern California and Southern Oregon have never encouraged anything on the "boom" order in mining, and it is not a healthy locality for Rhyolite and Greenwater, Nav. fakers.

Near Orleans, and on parts of the Klamath Indian reservation are localities that will pay to mine from the grass roots. Near Hawkinsville, Yreka and Hornbrook a mineral collector will find gold ore "way up in the picture valleys." In this section of California where the Siskiyou (with its many mountain passes) has you one hour on California ground and in the next hour on Southern Oregon territory, many placers are operated, working year in and year out, "where everybody works, including father."

Much has been written regarding the so-called black sands of the Pacific coast; where every rancher would own and operate a blast furnace for commercial metallic iron (?) but notwithstanding the great sums of money that have been expended on "tests" the fact remains that iron obtained from the sources indicated is of very doubtful value; the titaniferous iron contents, with those of phosphorus, will not make satisfactory iron; because such iron is "cold short." The monazite sand, zircon and other contents of the black sand might be profitable to a company headed by a living Baron Munchausen.

Even the platinum in these sands is a difficult matter to separate; platinum values to a low per cent being combined with some of the iron and the grain and flake platinum is as tedious to "pick out" as it would be for a pickaninny with hands covered with molasses to pick loose feathers.

The Greenback mine of Southern Oregon supported a town of 500 people for many years; it was "worked out" this year (?)

The Golden Wedge mine is said to have "a nine-foot lead of $400 per ton" (20 ounces approximately). The writer knows that over 200 tons of the ore at this mine "goes" $200 per ton.

One of the ablest mining engineers of Nevada stated recently at the Holbeck hotel in Los Angeles that "The Ashland is the greatest mine on the Pacific coast," to which opinion the writer adds "and with more ore bodies of low grade free milling ores than any three mines on the Pacific coast."

Jackson county has approximately produced $35,000,000 from its placers, and Josephine county is probably ahead of this production from lode sources. Some of the bars of gravel—even on the smaller placers—of Josephine and Jackson counties, are phenomenally rich, yielding as high as $4 per cubic yard. A general average of well-equipped mines will go 45 cents per cubic yard; with 15 to 20 cents on some workings carelessly treated with too little quicksilver and muscel.

The old Sterling placer has produced $50,000 annually.

Another placer, near Monumental—"which never gets into print"—is good for a like output.

There are probably 500 placers in Southern Oregon and 85 per cent of the number pay for working.

There have been no failures in Southern Oregon quartz mining where intelligent methods have been pursued. Operators with but little experience, and unfamiliar with the ores of the different states of our country are, of course, puzzled when
