THE RANGERS LIFE. (Continued.)

The forest ranger's life is joy. His days are spent in play. His weeks are fun without alloy. His months one happy round day. But just to keep himself in trim He works a bit each day.

Monday sees a mile of trail Blocked by a landslide's fall: He mends a couple of bridges felled And cuts the grade on the canyon wall. But aside from putting that trail in shape, He does not work at all.

Tuesday finds him full of sand And clean as a chimney sweep. He rides ten miles to the driveway stand And tallies ten thousand head of sheep; But seeing this trifling duty done, He spends the night in sleep.

Wednesday morning some tourists came, Loaded with ignorance, matches and gall, 'Vell primed to set the forest aflame And burn the timber straight and tall. He trailed them till they were safe in bed, But otherwise did not work at all.

Thursday a couple of thieves he caught Filling fake claims to get the wood. This day's work almost came to naught, For they were friends of Senator Goode. But after the gang was safe in jail He loafed, as a ranger should.

Friday he made a timber sale With a certified check as security. He figured the stand by the decimal scale And branded U. S. on every tree. So, while he might have done some work He passed the day in ecstasy.

And Saturday, like the rest of the week, He played at tennis and golf and ball; He shod his pony, cleaned the creek, Burned some litter and built a stall; But, generally speaking, the livelong day He wrote his reports—that's all, appear in court for the first time at

NEED MANY MEN TO CARE FOR CROP

The following paragraph in a news dispatch from Walla Walla, Wash., shows how eager the farmers are for men to help in caring for the crops this season, and there is no excuse for so many men lounging around the cities of the western part of Oregon and Washington as there have been for several months past: "The alfalfa crop this season is an unqualified success, and now that a good stand has been secured, hay growers are fearful lest shortage of men in caring for it result in great damage, especially if rainy weather should occur next week. Several Walla Walla men who have retired from the farm, but who still own ranches, say they have been boarding men free of charge for the past two weeks in order to hold them until the lay crop was ready for harvest. The men have been doing nothing for their keep other than waiting until the alfalfa crop is ripe to cut."

VISITS MEDFORD TWICE IN TWENTY YEARS

Thomas Oster, who lives in the Cove, south and east of Ashland, is certainly a "home body." Twenty years ago he passed through Medford on his way to Jacksonville to file on the homestead he now occupies. Medford wasn't a city then; in fact, it wasn't much more than a chaparral patch, and it didn't impress him. He made another trip thirty years ago, but since that time has been without actual personal knowledge of the metropolis of the Rogue River valley. In the time he has spent upon his homestead his visits to the towns of the valley have been strictly confined to excursions made necessary from business reasons, and his late visit to this city was one of these—as appear as a witness in a land case.

Right, You Are.

Nothing else of the same cost adds so much to the attractiveness of a town, nothing else gives such an air of prosperity and thrift, of comfort and content as the good repair and neat appearance of building and fences and generally well kept up premises. A few dollars spent by way of paint, and a little time spent now and then fixing up, toning up and keeping things in order, has a most wonderful effect and a store of satisfaction. Great and impulsive edifices are not necessary to beauty and attractiveness. We know of some humble cottages, yet are so enveloped in neatness and tidiness of all their round about, we never look on them, but we are reminded it must be pleasant to be there.—Jacksonville Post.
