AMUSEMENTS

Georgia Harper in "Camille." Another delighted audience filed out of the opera house last night, with nothing but words of praise for Georgia Harper and her clever company. No time this season have we had better costuming, better scenery and mountings or better acting.

As Dumas' heroine, Miss Harper is seen at her best. She is an ideal Camille, and for once the press agent has not exaggerated.

In this role she certainly ranks with the greatest living actresses. Last night she did not act Camille—she was Camille. Every chord of the gamut of human emotions was touched and each one rang true. Miss Harper's gown, too, were much in evidence, and must have delighted the feminine portion of the audience.

Of the supporting company, Mr. Joseph Detrick in the rather thankless part of Armand, deserves special mention, although there was no flaw anywhere in the east. Mr. Detrick should make an ideal rector in tonight's play, "The Little Minister."

Medford theatregoers should turn out in full force during the balance of the Harper company's engagement, for Manager Hazledrigg has certainly offered nothing this season where they have received more value for the money or time spent.
