WASSON CANYON FLOW.

According to statements made by Chief Engineer Roberts, there is at the present time 170 inches of water flowing in Wasson canyon. This can be expected to materially diminish before the wet season begins. How much can only be guessed. Evidence concerning the autumn flow is conflicting. Many old ranchers say the stream goes dry. Others say there is a good flow.

One thing is certain, there never was 300 inches of water in this canyon to purchase, except during winter months. The first measurement taken in late spring showed less quantity than the amount contracted for by

Though the water committe does not think so, the publie, who are paying for the water, are greatly interested in the matter, and the news that if, after paying $25,000. there is not the requisite water in Wasson canyon a supplemental supply can be purchased elsewhere is received with real relief by many, who supposed that the city had forfeited this right.

In this connection, figures on the flow of streams in Jackson county as measured by the government are interesting. They show that low water mark is generally reached in October. This year streams are higher than at this time of year for several years, due to the late spring and the recent thunder showers. The Rogue is 0.4 of a foot higher than a year ago and must fall 1.2 feet to reach the low water mark of last October. What is true of the Rogue is relatively true of all streams in the county, showing that a material diminution in Wasson canyon flow can be expected.

The government measurement of streams taken August 5, 1906, shows a flow of 1936 miners' inches in the Little Butte at Eagle Point, of 6560 miners' inches at the Big Butte, three-quarters of a mile above the bridge; of 4400 miners' inches at Ruch, in the Applegate, and of 360 miners' inches at the fish hatchery in Elk creek. The flow of the Rogue river at Gold Ray was 72,200 inches. The flow in both Antelope and Trail creeks was too small to be measured in second feet.

Last year the Rogue at Gold Ray fell 0.2 of a foot in May, 0.3 of a feet in June, 1.1 feet in July, 0.1 in August, 0.4 in September, 0.3 in October. In November it raised 0.4 and in December 5.5 feet. This year the Rogue fell 0.5 in June and 0.7 in July. The stream is falling slower so far than it did last year, but those familiar with the river predict that it will make a new low water record this fall, as there is now less snow in the mountains than for many

HASTENS GOVERNMENT OWNERSHIP.

In the suit brought by the Southern Pacific to declare the interstate commerce commission acts illegal and the Hepburn act unconstitutional in order to prevent the reduction in lumber rates from Willamette valley points to California to their former basis as ordered by the commission, the railroad makes a point which, if sustained, is of vital interest to all inland communities. It is a hint of what will happen to the fruit and other industries as soon as they are established, if the power to regulate is withheld from the government.

The complaint explains that the road once established a rate of $3.10 on lumber from these points to California these in the county who were paying in order to foster the lumber business in the north, but 350 sawmills sprung up as the result of the low rate. Now that the business has been established, says the complaint, the road is in the field to make money.

On the same basis, western fruit sections are given a low rate to eastern markets to cause the planting of orchards, and as soon as the hills are covered with bearing fruit trees, the railroad can be expected to increase "all the traffic will bear," unless restrained.

Should the railroad succeed, which is improbable, it will again prove the futility of government regulation, and hasten government ownership.

Medford, Or., July 18, 1908. Maine's Liquor Law.

"Maine never has been a prohibi on state in spite of the fact that for years she had had a prohibitory law on her statute books, and for most of the time in her constitution," says Hol-man Day, the well known editor and riter of stories about the Pine Tre date, who has just completed a study of the much discussed Maine liquor lay for Appleton's Magazine. As a news copper man Mr. Day has observed the working of the prohibitory law i Maine for the past 20 years, and b isserts that at no time since the proibition law was passed has it been inforced throughout the state. In som s, rhiefly in rural sections, the entirely suppressed at times, in cities and other communities where the maority sentiment has been against th into liquor law, the sale has been per mitted openly, although illegally Maline's experience does not prove tha robibition is either a good thing o i bad thing for a state, in Mr. Day's opinion, because Maine never has had eal prohibition.

Until the adoption of the Sturgis law he sole power of enforcing the stat ites against liquor selling rested in the hands of sheriffs and other local offi rinks, who interpreted the law accord ng to the sentiment of their own com nities, Under the Storgis law a spe ctal commission appointed by the gov-ernor, with a large number of deputies at its command, has had charge of the enforcement of the prohibitory measures. According to Mr. Day, the legis ature is almost certain to repeal this aw at its next session and the state will go back to the old plan by which or itself. This will mean a resump of what has come to be known the Bangor plan, "Under the Bangor plan," says the Appleton article, "the sheriff and cour attorney permitted a certain num saloons and hotels to self liqui-Prior to the term of court at which then were to be 'assessed' the county storney or his agent went to the of one of the collector of internal revenue and drew off a list of the names of secial liquor retailer's tax to the Unit d States government. The list was accepted as evidence and the parties were indicted and paid the regular fine and costs, amounting to $110. Usually the rounty 'assessed' twice a year. Pen shear county paid off its debt and util a handsome new courthouse while hat plan was in operation."

While any man who wants to obair liquor can do it without much dirscalty in almost any part of the state here is no prospects that the prohibition law will be repealed," said Mr. Day in explaining the conclusions be us drawn from his 20 years' study of the subject. 'In other words, Maine is strongly committed to prohibition, but just as strongly against its enforce Something which is of considerable Master Fish Warden McAllister has appointed Edward Chanton of Grants Pass as deputy fish warden to smoceed John D. Wilson of Yonealla, who is thought, will not help in the correcting of these wrongs.

The fish question in Regne river is lated for removal October 1. Many of the fishermen of Jackson county will question the wissiom of Mr. McAllister's act in appointing a Grants Pass man to the office, as there is the seat of trouble along the river. During the term of office of the late master feab warden, Van Dosen, the most flag rant violations of the fish laws have been permitted by the fish laws have been permitted by the fish laws have been permitted by the fish can be and otherwise destroy the fish beent permitted by the fish laws have been a thorn in the side of Gold Hill News.

Balantinent of a Josephine county man, it is thought, will not help in the correcting of these wrongs.

The fish question in Regne river is fast becoming all important issue to the people of Jackson county, and the most flag rant violations of the fish laws have very much like discrimination to allow rant violations of the fish laws have not and not give the people of Jackson county in the fish in connection with these tickets been a thorn in the side of Gold Hill News.
