A CITY OF HOMES.

There is hardly a day passes bu that some stranger within our gates comments upon the large number of new residences that are being built in each and every section of our city. Recently a gentleman ventured the belief that Medford has more new houses in the course of erection than any city in Oregon in proportion to its size.

We have not the slightest doubt but that the gentleman was entirely correct in his belief. Certainly no one who makes a tour of Medford will be inclined to doubt it. Locate yourself wherever you may at any point within the city, and your eyes will behold new roofs rising into view in every direction.

Nothing could be more encouraging than this condition, for it is homes that we desire above all things. Some times there are persons given to a false course of reasoning, who regard the rapid increase of homes in a community as a calamity, on the ground that it is better than fewer homes and more factories should be built. They fail to grasp the fact that homes demand factories. In other words, the people who are locating in this valley in such large numbers are not the kind of people who are in the habit of sitting around and "eating their heads off." They are Americans of the best class, who will find things to do. They will themselves build the factories demanded by their necessities.

A country whose every single acre of fertile ground will produce a living for an average family can never be a country of idleness or want. Land and water are the two requisites of prosperity. We have the land—the best that lies out of doors-and the mountains about this valley have all the water we shall ever need and which is to be had for the taking, as we are told it is soon to be taken from some source in the heart of the great hills.

It is, therefore, with a sense of exaltation and vast content that we should look upon the new roofs that are lifted, as from a touch of magic, to the sun of each shining morning that leaps across the mother mountains upon the "Cream of Creation." It means more happy people to share with us the best country on earth. It means that here, where once the moccasined feet of the Indians followed on the tracks of the deer; where the ox carts of the early settlers creaked their way along the paths of dream, we shall build the metropolis of Southern Oregon, fair in its destiny and unrivaled in its beauty.
