

TEDDY STANDS BY HITCHCOCK

If Any Republicans Object Roosevelt Will Give Them Piece of His Mind

WASHINGTON, Oct. 3.—Republican politicians are discussing today a statement given out at the White House last night in which it was said that President Roosevelt endorses the Hitchcock management of the Taft campaign and calls on republicans to give the republican campaign manager their earnest support.

The Hitchcock situation was discussed at a cabinet meeting yesterday and it is stated that the president waxed warm when informed of the rumors that he had been behind a movement to discredit Hitchcock. He is said to have expressed himself strongly on the subject and declared that he would give any republicans who come to the White House with criticism of Hitchcock a piece of his mind on the subject.

Did Not Send for Hitchcock.
The president stated that he had not called Hitchcock to Washington, but that if the republican manager wanted to come, he would be glad to receive him and converse.

It is rumored here today that the president sent Secretary Root to New York to ascertain the trouble with the Taft campaign and that Root reported that the trouble lay with Treasurer George R. Sheldon. It is stated that the president and Taft objected to the collection of funds from some of the corporations with which Sheldon is allied and that others had stated Sheldon did not get enough money.

President Roosevelt's Mistake.

By F. A. Tobler.

The actions of the present administration has revealed one useful fact, notwithstanding it has accomplished nothing in the great campaign of the people against the trusts.

We all know that Roosevelt is by nature a reformer, and being that, he must necessarily be of a high moral character. Thus when he became by accident and force of circumstances, president of the United States, his true character asserted itself and he began doing things. The greatest thing his actions have resulted in, however, was to reveal to the people that the application of the law is not a remedy, but that the law in its action is but a check to stop growth until a remedy can be applied. In other words, the politician applies the law for practically the same reasons that a physician gives his patient his first dose of medicine. To check the progress of the disease until he can diagnose the case and find the cause. The physician who cannot direct his attacks upon the cause of a disease cannot cure the disease. That is evident. So with Mr. Roosevelt. He applied the law and he checked the trusts, but he found himself in a party which held no remedy and the trusts won as the disease wins out against the physician.

If you want to kill the trusts, it is right to apply the law which stops growth, but if you have no remedy to destroy the principle that creates trusts the law avails nothing. However, at this point we can all agree that Mr. Roosevelt made no greater mistakes in applying the law under circumstances where there was no remedy than did the republican party in putting a man—a reformer, so contrary to their principles, in line with such office. The salvation of the people depends, therefore, upon two things: First, the man of right character; second, the party with right principles or methods. Without this combination nothing substantial can be done. But twice in our national life has the rule been given back to the people. They could not keep it.

First, George Washington wrestled the scepter from the king and gave it to the people absolutely. George Washington and his party, however, were anonymous. Washington made the party and the party made him, and only with the character of the man at the helm and the party policies are alike can such a condition as Washington created obtain. Second, in this category comes our great Lincoln, but the party adopted Lincoln. The character of the man and party methods were not in union, under which circumstances the best that this great and good man could do for the people he so loved was to create a condition in our national life which had to be reasonably settled before the "money glands" could rightly begin to secrete.

He freed the slaves. Lincoln knew that his work was but temporary. That his blood, dripping as it was, did not strike the soil. Apropos of which he said: "I see a cloud gathering in our midst that overshadows me and makes me tremble and fear for our national life, more than any circumstances of the civil war." His great vision had sighted the money power of today. Three days later Lincoln was shot. He had made a mistake. He revealed his plans to the enemy.

At the Savoy.

The management of the Savoy were unable to accommodate all the people who desired to attend the theater last night. The house was filled to capacity time and time again. The crowd waiting to get in blocked the street for some time.

The entertainment given at this popular new theater last evening was strictly high-class. The motion pictures were the latest and caused a great deal of laughter. Miss Brown rendered the song, "Passion," with a great deal of vim, and deserved the applause which was given her. The orchestra music offered was of excellent quality and pleased very well.

The first performance commences to night at 7 p. m. Admission, 10 cents.

Apples have been in larger supply this week, but a large share of the receipts has been from up-river sections and showing very uncertain quality with prices ruling low and irregular on bulk of the stock.
