Des. Money and Churches.
 In the eighteenth century there were 10 temperance societies or bands of hope, nor Reebaldies and blue ribbon army. To be as "drunk as a lord" was the height of human felicity. It was the age of "three bottle men," of convivial toasts, of drinking songs. Even the church indirectly encouraged intemperance. There were certain districts where at Whitsuntide the churchwardens were accustomed to levy contributions of malt from the parishioners. This was brewed into strong ale and sold in the church. The Whitsuntide toppers had, however, a pious method in their madness.
 The money spent on the beer was expended by the churchwardens in church maintenance, and the muddled roisterers no doubt believed themselves to be pillars of the church even when, under the influence of the alcohol, they rolled upon its pavement. They thought themselves supporters of the church when they wanted "supporting" themselves and deemed themselves most saintly when they were most sordid. Until as recently as 1827 (when the license was withdrawn) a church and public house were covered by one roof at Deepdale, midway between Derby and Nottingham. A door that could be opened at will served to separate the consecrated interior of the church from the common taproom of the tavern—Chambers' Journal.

Good Bait.
 "I got Cleveland's autograph," said the friend, "by addressing to him a little note on his splendid work in the White House ament the Russo-Japanese war—or was it something else? At any rate, I shall never forget my delight when, by return mail, Mr. Cleveland wrote:
 "Dear Sir—I have read your verses with interest. They appear to me very deficient in sense and substance."
 "I sent a sonnet of sympathy to Bernard Shaw on the failure of his play, 'This House in Order,' or some such title. Mr. Shaw replied on a post card as follows:
 "Thank you very much for your sonnet, which seems at least sincere."
 "I once ventured to address a rouser to Ellen Terry. In it I praised her beauty passionately. Miss Terry sent me a long and interesting note of acknowledgment, in the course of which she said:
 "I noticed many faults and weaknesses in your rouser, which, however, made me laugh heartily."—Exchange.

At Last.
 Mrs. Silas Bennett was a philosopher. On a certain dismal occasion some of the neighboring women were condoling with her. With commendable cheerfulness she replied:
 "I've raised four girls an' three boys, expectin' every time they'd be twins and red-headed like their Grandpa Bennett, an' yet they ain't."
 "An' I've worried considerable over smallpox breakin' out in my big family. So far 'tain't."
 "Last summer durin' July an' August an' mebbe part of September I was real melon-hole, fearin' I'd got an appendix, but I guess I ain't."
 "An' through it all it never once occurred to me that I'd be the one to fall through them rotten old meath's house steps an' break my leg in two places, but I be."

The water in Crater Lake is cold and of a crystal clearness. In the lake is the old volcano cone, projecting above the water, forming Wizard Island. Long ago big medicine men told the dusky Indian warriors that the boat of the cone was the home of a powerful wizard. Now Coleman Mineral Water is cooling and of a crystal clearness. It is "big medicine" for stomach ailments, and a truly delightful table water. Concocted in the interior of old Siskiyou mountain, the prehistoric Oregon Island, by nature's most expert chemistry.
