DON FULANO STOOD TEST BY STRANGERS WELL
 business men of the city, Don Fulano, the educated horse, was last evening quizzed from the audience, but he failed to be mixed on colors. The intelligent little animal got any color called for and matched colored paper held to view in the center of the room by picking out its likeness from his different colored banners.
 He was even asked to bring the two colors of the Japanese flag, which he did without the least hesitancy, bringing, however, a yellow banner. This evidently was to show that as a yellow race the Japanese should have had yellow in their flag.
 Another Test Tonight.
 The men who have put up the wager, however, are not as yet satisfied, and at tonight's performance Don Fulano will be asked a series of questions regarding figures and given simple sums in addition and subtraction. If Don Fulano does not fall down on his examination tonight, it will be taken for granted that he reasons as clearly as a child would do.
 Last evening behind the scenes Don Fulano was put through a series of difficult tricks by a person whom he had never seen before. Routine was thrown to the winds and anything that was asked for was done. For instance, Don has an act where he writes a letter, then carries it to the office and mails it and then opens his postoffice box and gets out a letter. Night after night he goes through this routine. But last night an entire stranger to him told him to go and get his letter from the box. Don wheeled, went directly to the box, opened it and took his letter out. Nor did he pause at any time, showing conclusively that the little pony knew what was wanted.
 No Mistakes for Don.
 The usual run of trained animals (Don claims to be educated) will, if they make a mistake, run back to the starting point and have to be started over again. Not so with Don. If he drops anything he stops and picks it up. He never comes back to his master until his work is done. Which shows that the little animal reasons. He has to successfully do his stunts.
 Dr. Ellis leaves on Monday for Ashland, where he will show four days. He then goes to San Francisco and goes on.
 As the result of a wager between two of the regular Orpheum circuit.
