The play is presented in three acts (the first act being an exterior at Hong Kong), 1. The ascent the interior of the sailing ship, at a mythical epoch, and the third an interior of the soldiers' home. Miss Burdell will be supported by a company of players selected for their sympathetic fitness for the roles entrusted to them and to the best are Theodore (Ed. Sedgwick Smith, Frank Sheridan, W. up town in the company of nine women. He did not know the women. He simply happened to land in a car in the midst of the bunch. Five of them sat in the front seat of the open car and four in the seat facing it. The tenth passenger was Brummagem. He sat at the end of the seat, and when the conductor came along he obligingly helped to pay the fares—that is, he reached out for the woman's money and handed it along—and then when the conductor had counted out the change Brummagem passed it back to his neighbors.

Nature's such a complicated financial arrangement caused some confusion. There were so many fair hands thrust forward at one time that it was hard to keep track of the amount contributed by each, and when the accounts were finally settled possibly to one but the conductor knew just how matters stood. However, he had kept his head level all the way through, so he had no scruples about reaching across toward the woman in the far corner and calling out, "Fare, please!" in very positive tones.

The woman blushed.
"Why, great gracious," she said, "I paid you a long while ago!"
"I didn't get it," said the conductor.
"I've got only nine fares."
"But I paid," said the woman. "I gave it to him," and she pointed to Brummagem. "I gave him a quarter. I've been wondering why I didn't get my change back."

"Of course I did!" the woman insisted. "Just as if you didn't know it! Conductor, please make him give me the change."

And Hennipkens, speechless with indignation, gave it to him and handed the woman 20 cents to change.

The remainder grumbled. "I guess," said he confidently, "that after this you had better let folk pay their own fares."

"Thanks," said Promotingen. "I think I shall. Who knows?" Philadelphia Public Ledger.
