

LOCAL BERRIES ARE COMING IN FREELY

Prices Are Moderate and Not Excessive, as Reported From Other Sections of Northwest.

24—LOCAL BERRIES
Local strawberries have been coming on the market during the past week in considerable quantities and the prices are actually getting within the reach of the ordinary man's pocketbook. The high prices paid elsewhere for the berry at this season of the year are shown by the following dispatches:

White Salmon, Wash., May 21.—J. Morgan Lewis of this place is in receipt of a check for $10 from a Spokane commission house for a half-crate of strawberries. This is believed to be the highest price ever paid for early berries, and is at the rate of $20 a crate.

Portland, Or., May 21.—Oregon strawberries of the Gold Dollar variety have made their appearance. A fancy lot was received from Springbrook yesterday and brought 20 cents a pound. Other southern Oregon berries of average quality moved at 10 to 12½ cents a pound.

The supply of California berries at present does not exceed the demand and prices are more firmly maintained than was the case last week. Average receipts now are 1200 to 1500 crates daily. The season for Jessies is practically finished and the Dollar berries that are coming along are generally good. The ruling price on them is $1.50 per crate.

Hood River, Or., May 21.—Hood River strawberry crop which is this year expected to yield 60,000 crates, is later than in former years. The cold winds which have prevailed this spring are said by growers to account for the lateness of berries and shipments in any quantity are not expected before June 1. The first shipment went out last season a year ago today. Everything is being got in readiness to handle the berry crop and growers are busy engaging pickers.

Small shipments are reported from the Washington side of the river, which is somewhat earlier than the Hood River country. It is stated that more berry plants were sent here this spring than for several years.

MAGNATES TRAVEL FROM PASS TO COAST

Exact Object of Their Trip Not Known, but Claim to Be Looking at Timber.

Much curiosity was aroused in Grants Pass last Wednesday when a private car rolled into that city on the second section of No. 16 and was set out, and the next morning three gentlemen from the car left by automobile for Crescent City, says the Courier. The car was a Chicago, St. Paul, Minneapolis and Omaha of the Northwestern and F. B. Olding had been engaged by these gentlemen for the trip by automobile. The three gentlemen were A. W. Frenholm, general manager of the C., St. P. M. & O. railroad; F. D. Stout, president of the Missouri Southern, and W. B. Diekmann, a capitalist of New York.

To add to the curiosity of the people, on Thursday a force of surveyors from the north disembarked here and also started for Crescent City. Both of the parties returned to this city Sunday and the private car left on No. 14. If the two parties had any connection with each other they were very careful not to let it be known.

In conversation with Mr. Olding he stated that he could give no enlightenment on the subject, and if the parties were looking over the country with any idea of building a railroad they kept the matter mighty close to themselves. He took them to Crescent City and from there to Smith river and up two creeks at some redwood timber which is owned by the Del Norte company. The three gentlemen were very much surprised at the big timber between here and the coast and they were continually pointing out the big trees, but were very close of mouth and gave out no hint of their mission in the presence of Mr. Olding outside of looking at the timber.

The only tangible remarks they made were that it would not be much difficulty to build a railroad from here to the coast, and that would be the only feasible way of handling the vast amount of timber to any advantage, for the cost of loading it on vessels and unloading at San Francisco and again loading it on cars for the east was too much expense and only the best of timber could be utilized, while seconds, etc., would have to be thrown away.
