SMUDGING PROVES A GREAT SUCCESS

GRANTS PASS, Aug. 6.—Last spring it was a question with many orchardists whether smudging for frost was a success. The Southern Pacific took an interest in the matter and supplied Grants Pass and Medford with crude oil to experiment with. Shank & Hall, who now have the Eismann orchard down the river, used the oil in part of the orchard and in the rest of the orchard they had bonfires and smudges of different material. A visit to this orchard last Sunday showed that most all of the trees are heavily loaded with apples and hundreds of boxes have been taken from the trees in thinning them. It was a practical demonstration, and clearly shows that smudging is an absolute preventative of frost.

The part of the orchard where the oil was used is equal if not better than any of the rest. This orchard will produce this year an immense crop of apples and all is due to smudging. There is no question that if the owners had not resorted to smudging frost would have taken the entire crop.

Note was also taken of the amount of oil necessary for a night's smudging. Owing to the lateness of placing their order for oil pots they did not get the kind they wanted. The kind they got was not as good nor as economical as some of the other kinds manufactured. Each pot holds about half a gallon of oil and the pots were placed through every other row of trees. These pots, lighted between 11 and 12 o'clock, burned until 7 o'clock in the morning. What crude oil for this purpose can be purchased for is not known, but it costs the railroad company laid down here about two cents a gallon, and it is not likely the expense would be much greater.

At this orchard is another demonstration of orchard growing. They have a five-acre orchard set out, every other row being peach trees, and the other apples. Peaches come into bearing much quicker than apples so that the grower will realize from the orchard much quicker this way than otherwise, and all the trees are looking fine. Between the rows are potatoes and a finer patch of potatoes cannot be found anywhere and this will be a very profitable crop. It is worth an orchardist's time to go out and see this orchard at the preta time.

A camping party composed of Gus Newbury, Mr and Mrs. W. T. Grieve and Miss McCoy of Portland, left for Crater lake Wednesday morning in Mr. Newbury's new car.

Mr. and Mrs. John Beeson and daughter of Medford attended the tennis tournament Wednesday and Thursday at Jacksonville.

JACKSONVILLE WINS TENNIS TOURNAMENT

At the Southern Oregon Tennis Tournament, held at Jacksonville Wednesday and Thursday, Jacksonville won the cup. Grants Pass scored 3 points, Jacksonville 5 and Medford 9. The Grants Pass team were Misses Christina McLean and Marjorie Kinney Roy David and W. C. Long. Medford's players were O. H. Johnson, John Beeson, Misses Lizze Netherland and Flora Thompson. J. F. Campbell, Dr. I. N. Hester and Ephraim Wilson were the victors. The next game will be played at Grants Pass on Labor Day.

W. H. Crawford and wife and C. W. Emerson left Thursday for Seattle.

George Lance and family came back from a short trip the first of the week. George was one of the lucky hunters, succeeding in slaying a couple of the antlered ones.

S. G. Hodges returned the first of the week from a hunt in the Evans-Creek country, and reports the deer few and far between. When Sam hunts three days and comes back with two, there isn't much use for the ordinary man to go out at all.

A meeting of the German Cone's Horse Co., consisting of twelve of the representative horsemen a farmers of Sams Valley and Gold Hill, was held at this place Monday afternoon, wherein plans were laid for next season and the results of the two previous seasons were discussed. Lanz, the horse owned by the company is one of the finest specimens of the breed ever brought to this country and the appearance of his colts show that he has the power of transmitting his good qualities.

Mrs. M. R. Rice, who returned last week from her vacation, is very enthusiastic over the exhibits at the Seattle Fair, and also concerning the scenery in and about the Sound, but can find no words to express her admiration of our own Crater Lake, which she visited before taking the trip north. "I had read descriptions and had seen pictures of the lake" said Mrs. Rice, "until I thought that I knew just about what it would look like when I would see it, but the first view of the lake disabused me of all previously formed ideas. It was something so much more extensive, so much grander, so much more beautiful than my imagination was able to portray, that it simply left me breathless. When one walks to the brink of those immense cliffs and gazes downward into that vast crater, one involuntarily feels her insignificance in the face of this example of the result of one of the mighty convulsions of nature. No wonder that the superstitious Indians avoided the vicinity of the mysterious, silent lake. When one gazes into the unfathomable depths of that clear blue water and then upward—and again upward—to the summit of the cliffs towering thousands of feet above, meanwhile sailing in a small boat, which seems to be floating in air almost, so near is the color of the water below to the sky which arches above you, one realizes how infinitesimally small a human being is.
