SOUTHERN OREGON LEADS IN FRUIT.

The summary of fruit conditions compiled by the Portland Oregonian, appearing in another column of the Tribune, is intensely interesting to southern Oregon, and is made doubly so by the fact that the Oregonian is forced, for once, to admit that this section excels in something. The Oregonian has ever favored other sections of the state as against southern Oregon, but for once it has been forced to admit southern Oregon's supremacy.

"The best general reports come from southern Oregon," says the Oregonian. And there are a multitude of reasons for this. Briefly enumerated the more important ones are:

- The most favorable climate.
- The best adapted soil.
- The most intelligent orchardists.
- The greatest acreage.
- The most modern methods.

The southern Oregon spirit—the spirit that is satisfied with nothing but the best; that does not tolerate shiftlessness; that leaves nothing undone which tends for progress.

OREGON FRUIT CROPS GOOD.

Mosier. Around The Dalles 750 acres of new orchards have been set out, while 1700 acres of young orchards will begin to bear next year. In southern Oregon, particularly in the Rogue River valley, thousands of acres are being set out in apples, while in the Willamette valley the acreage of apples and peaches is being steadily increased. About 400 acres of new apple orchards and 150 acres of peach orchards have been set out in the vicinity of Albany. There has been a large increase in the peach acreage of Marion county, and 10 to 20 per cent increase in the apple acreage.

Estimates of the apple crop this year in the eastern states vary widely the statistics furnished by the dealers' associations indicating a yield larger than that of last year, while the returned furnished by growers point to a smaller crop. The government report of the apple crop on July 1 showed a condition of 54.6, compared with 61.4 on June 1, 57.6 on July 1, 1908, and 63.3 the ten-year average on July 1. When the report was compiled the principal producing countries were in the grip of a long drouth, and there may have been improvement in the situation since that time.

One of the best eastern authorities on such matters, the Chicago Packer, has canvassed the situation thoroughly, and finds the total crop of the country will fall moderately short of last year's production. The only important districts that will have a larger crop than last year are Colorado and Michigan. New York state will fall under its customary output, and the Ozark district will have a light crop, though it had practically none last year. Nebraska and Kansas will not have a surplus, and the New England states and Virginia are showing irregular yields.

Canada reports a moderate crop of apples this year, and Nova Scotia a large yield, but most of this surplus goes abroad.

The crops of Great Britain and parts of continental Europe are said to promise well, but France's apple crop is a failure.

SALEM BEER
 SALEM is the most popular beer in Northern California and Southern Oregon. It is acknowledged to be the equal of the very best eastern product. All beers are good, but some beers are liked better than others. The proof for this assertion lies in drinking Salem beer. If you wish to be convinced, ask for Salem beer and drink it.
