Curious Habits of Spiders.
 The water spider carries air down with it when it dives. Dr. McCook saw one remain forty-five minutes under the water. One water spider builds a nest under the water attached to the stem of some plant and in the shape of a diving bell, with the opening downward. It fills this bell with air by taking down a bubble at a time. Coming to the surface, it incloses an air bubble under its body and instantly descends. Getting under the nest, the bubble is allowed to escape into it, and this process continues until the nest is full of air. The spider then lays its eggs there, enclosed in a cocoon and leaves them to grow in this underwater palace, safe from all flying foes. When these water spiders are seen under water they look like little balls of shining silver. Little bubbles of air seem to cling among the hairs of their bodies. As spiders, like insects, breathe the air at little holes along the whole length of the body, they can easily make use of these bubbles of air for breathing.—London Standard.

Drinking Cups of the Ancients.
 Silver cups made by such famous workmen as Myron, Myes and Mentor were preferred to gold cups. They were very beautifully engraved and of workmanship which has never been equaled. When gold cups were enriched with precious stones they sometimes became peers of the engraved silver vessels. Of all sizes, shapes and designs were these drinking cups, and their value was measured more by their form and design than the material of which they were made. Some had two handles, some only one and some none at all. They were large and small, low and tall, narrow and oblong. They were purely the product of the varying fancy of that prodigious age, which seemed to scorn uniformity. The early Greeks and Romans drank hot water from cups, as we now drink coffee and tea, these beverages being unknown to them. Coffee originated with the Assyrians, and tea was first used by the Chinese at a very early age.—National Food Magazine.

Curzon and Davitt.
 Once in the house of commons, when George Curzon was making some defense as to alleged harsh treatment by Turks of Cretan prisoners, he was interrupted by a query from Mr. Davitt, "Were these prisoners handcuffed?" Quick as lightning came the reply, "Yes, and some honorable gentlemen ought to be no strangers to handcuffs." This was of course the signal for a violent parliamentary tempest. A day or two after Mr. Curzon went up to Swift MacNeill and expressed his sorrow at having used the expression and his desire to apologize for it in the most public manner. "Why," he said, "I thought the interruption came from you and that you, of course, would not mind. I was horrified when I discovered that it was Davitt who had made the remark. Of course I would not be capable of joking on the subject of imprisonment and handcuffs with a man who had endured nine long years of penal servitude."—London Globe.

Practical.
 "I send you 10,000 kisses," he wrote. "Bah!" she exclaimed, tossing his letter aside. "Why doesn't he come and look over his terminal facilities in person?"—Chicago Record-Herald.

COUNTY'S CHARGE FALLS HEIR TO BIG FORTUNE

BLOOMINGTON, Ill., Aug. 25.—Through the death of Oliver Newhouse of Indianapolis, an inmate of the poor farm of this county becomes heir to the former's fortune of $200,000. The legatee is 30 years old, and has been sick, penniless and friendless for some time. He had been employed at a local hotel as porter for several years, but he suffered an attack of rheumatism six months ago and was compelled to go to the poor farm.

Gladstone in a Huff.
 Max Muller once told about a curious experience he had when staying in Gladstone's own home in Hawarden. The conversation naturally turned to matters Hellenic, and in the course of it Gladstone made a grammatical mistake in Greek. His learned guest mildly tried to correct him, but Gladstone rather haughtily maintained that he was perfectly right. After another fruitless attempt of Max Muller, Gladstone became so imperative in his assertion that his guest quietly answered: "Well, we can easily solve the difficulty. No doubt you have a Greek grammar in the house. Let us look into it!" Thereupon Gladstone rose in a huff. No Greek grammar was brought down, nor did the great statesman appear himself any more on that occasion. It was a most painful scene for Max Muller. Mrs. Gladstone tried her best in the meantime to apologize for her husband's behavior. "I am sorry to say," she remarked, "that he cannot brook contradictions. I hope you won't mind it."—Westminster Gazette.

Knew His Fate.
 "Silas, my lad," said the grocer to his new assistant, "who bought that moldy cheese today?" "Mistress Brown, sir," was the youth's reply. "And the stale loaf we could not sell last night?" "Mistress Brown, sir." "Where's that lump of rancid butter that the baker refused?" "Mistress Brown bought it, sir," was the answer. "And the six eggs we could not sell a week since?" "Mistress Brown— Are you ill, sir?" asked Silas, as the grocer turned green and groaned. "No, no! Only I'm going to tea at the Browns' tonight," replied the unhappy man as he wiped the perspiration from his face and sank into a chair.—London Tit-Bits.

ANGRY WEST POINTERS ABJURE SOCIAL GAITY

WEST POINT, Aug. 25.—As a protest against the dismissal of seven cadets Thursday only a handful of the 400 boys in camp attended the regular social hop tonight. Of those who did many sat throughout all the dances, which in the vernacular of the school is called "giving it the silence."

That has been the only outward indication given by the cadets that they resent the expulsion of their comrades, but there is a deep undercurrent of resentment and there are many expressions of "they will soon be put back."

John H. Booker jr., of West Point, Ga., the first-class cadet who would have graduated next June, came back today to settle his accounts. When he left he was escorted to the railroad station by a group of comrades, and there were general expressions of regret.

Following his departure the camp practically went in mourning.

GREEK LABORER'S LIFE SLOWLY CRUSHED OUT
