

JUST THE THING FOR THIS VALLEY

Newest Invention Is a Trackless Trolley Working in England With Success

WASHINGTON, Aug. 28.—There are wireless telegraph systems, fireless cooking apparatus, horseless carriages and the like—and now comes a brand new proposition, the trackless trolley.

Consul Walter G. Hamm, who represents the United States at Hull, England, tells about the new scheme in a recent report. There are three or four such systems now in use on the continent and considerable satisfaction, too. The cars resemble those in this country. There is a trolley all right, but in the system which has found most practicable it differs from the one in use on the street cars. Two trolley wires are used, and on these roll wheels which are attached to cables that convey the current to and from the car motors. Plenty of slack cable permits the cars to maneuver all round the road, avoid other vehicles, and seek out the smooth spots.

Indeed a committee which visited the system from Leeds, England, and whose conclusions Hamm quotes, "were particularly struck with the smoothness and comfort of riding." The cost of the "trackless trolley"—both in installation and maintenance, is vastly cheaper than the present style of trolley.

COAL WILL SOON BE SCARCE ARTICLE

In Two Hundred Years It Will Be as Scarce as Diamonds. See Experts

WASHINGTON, Aug. 28.—People who are worrying about the coal bills they will have to pay in the coming winter should cease their troubling and turn their sympathies to those who will have that problem to meet one hundred years from now.

Those are the folks that will have the real troubles for, according to the geological survey, the coal supply of the country will be mighty near gone just about that time. Unless some "just as good" fuel is discovered in the meantime coal will, indeed, deserve its title of "black diamond," and all the present jokes about looking the precious stuff up in a safe will become true.

To be exact, Henry Gannett, of the geological survey, estimates that the easily accessible coal now in the ground will be exhausted about the year 2040, and all coal ten years later.

Of course, there are some "ifs" and "ands" connected with this prophecy. It is supposed that there are 3,147,043,000 tons of coal still in the ground, two-thirds of which is easily obtainable. During the last century only about one-third of one per cent. of the supply has been taken out. Two years ago, or in 1907, 480,000,000 tons were mined, more than in any previous year.

But you can't tell what will be the rate of production in succeeding years. Its bound to increase as the population grows. Then there's the exports. Even now European countries are looking more and more to the United States for their coal supply, and, unless coal exports are prohibited by legislation, the production in this country will increase beyond the demands of home consumption.

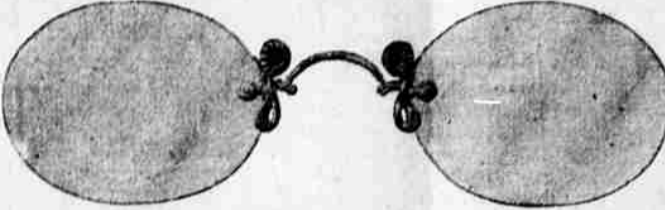

On the other hand powerful influences will come to bear upon coal production, which favor lengthening the life of the supply. Improved methods in the utilization of coal, increasing the efficiency per unit, may act as a factor in reducing coal consumption, and improving mining methods should likewise reduce the percentage of waste. That waste amounts now to about one ton of coal for every two tons marketed.

There is no place like home, but the Louvre cafe cooking is so near the kind mother used to do that you'll forget your troubles, especially if you are eating some of their famous hot waffles and maple syrup for breakfast.
