FOREST FIRE LOSSES DIMINISH THIS YEAR

WASHINGTON, Oct. 2.—This is the open season for forest fires. From late in the summer to the beginning of winter conflagrations sweep the forests and annually destroy thousands and thousands of dollars' worth of timber, farm property, and oftentimes human lives.

It will be several months before the total damage by forest fires is known. Probably it will reach $75,000,000. Last year the loss was conservatively estimated at $100,000,000—the record so far. A dry season, combined with what seemed to be even more than the usual indifference toward the small fires which always start the money-consuming conflagrations, is the reason assigned for this loss in 1908 by an authority of the forest service.

Going on the assumption that "an ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure," the service advocates a stringent patrol of all forested lands during the dry season. There really is no "cure" for forest fires—once the blaze has assumed goodly proportions there is practically nothing to do but wait until it burns itself out, although back-firing, trench digging and plenty of water help some.

In contrast with the enormous loss on private timbered lands, the forest service points with pride to the minimum damage done by fire on the national forests. Here a constant and systematic patrol by picked forces is maintained throughout the fire season, and the forests are here and there divided by "fire lines"—merely wide roads, across which fire cannot jump. Thus, if a blaze is discovered, it may be confined and extinguished before it assumes large proportions.

Fire protection plays an almost equal part with forest conservation. Primarily, scientific forestry is nothing more than conservative logging and prevention of fires. If fire losses can be lessened, there is so much the more timber ready for the ax, and naturally so much more to be gotten out of the forests without cutting clear.

REACHING THE SPOT

It Can Be Done, So Scores of Medford Citizens Say
To cure an aching back,
The pains of rheumatism,
The tired-out feelings,
You must reach the spot—get at the cause.
In most cases 'tis the kidneys.
Doan's Kidney Pills are for the kidneys.
G. L. Boone, corner Ninth and C streets, Medford, Or., says: "I was troubled with rheumatism when I first began using Doan's Kidney Pills. I did not think they would do me any good, but finally procured a box at Haskins' drug store. They proved to be the remedy I required. My kidneys were restored to their normal condition, and the pains and aches in my back were removed. Doan's Kidney Pills lived up to their representations in my case."
