DEMOCRATIC TICKET.

For President, GROVER CLEVELAND, Of New York.

For Vice President, A. E. STEVENSON, Of Illinois.

It is now evident that the re-election of Harrison means the perpetuation of bossism in Oregon politics.

GENERAL A. E. STEVENSON, the Democratic nominee for vice president, was a valiant soldier in the civil war, and was assistant postmaster general under the peerless leader, Grover Cleveland.

EVIDENTLY Mr. Harrison hasn't heard that out here in Oregon, as well as in some other places, the people have concluded to dispense with the services of machine party bosses.

MR. HARRISON would have done his administration fully as much honor by appointing Joe Simon to the federal judgeship of the Ninth judicial district, as he has done in appointing Jim Lotan to the "boss" position of collector of customs at Portland.

THE Pendleton East Oregonian says: "About the first lot of wool yet sold here was bought the other day from Gurdane Brothers, 22,300 pounds, at eleven cents. This is a fair price at this season, and much of the wool will have to be sold at lower rates."

Two boys, each only sixteen years old, are under sentence of death for murder, one in Iowa, and the other in New Jersey.

THE BUSINESS MEN AND CLEVELAND.

Cleveland has an element of tremendous strength in the business men. Throughout the country he has their confidence and respect.

Those of Adam Grant, of Murphy, Grant & Co., are equally pregnant with suggestion as to the feeling prevalent in business circles.

"I have always voted the Republican ticket, but in this election I am for Cleveland. He is the strongest man in the United States to-day. I know hundreds of strong Republicans who will give him their support, and I am confident of his election."

L. S. Bachman, also a Republican, of the firm of Bachman Brothers, thus reflects both Eastern and local sentiment.

"Cleveland is my choice for the office. As long as he made such a good president before I do not think he will make a bad one now."

George W. Hopkins, of the Carnall-Hopkins Company, resents the manner in which Mr. Harrison renominated himself by the unscrupulous use of the Federal machine.

"This is the beginning of a movement for single terms for president. The whole country was for Blaine, but Harrison with his machine won the nomination. You'll see that Cleveland will be elected."

Commodore Harrison joins the procession of solid men. "I intend to surprise my friends this year by voting for Cleveland, and I know a great many Republicans who will do the same."

Louis Meyerstein is not only for Cleveland himself, but he rejoices in the knowledge that he has plenty of Republican company.

with banner high advanced, on which is inscribed a name that is already an inspiration, not only to a party but to a people—GROVER CLEVELAND.

A NATIONAL DISGRACE.

Little less than civil war is the situation in Pittsburgh. The man Carnegie, the champion of a high tariff "because it increases wages," a Republican who uses his millions to found libraries and buy castles in Scotland, has decided that wages are too high, and so he has notified the several thousand ironworkers who produce the wealth he squanders in foreign lands, that they must take still less.

They declined to allow non-union men to take their places, and then four or five hundred murderers known as Pinkerton detectives were brought to the mills, armed with repeating rifles.

And what will the voters of Pennsylvania say at the polls next fall? Will they then, as in the past, vote to perpetuate in power a party that has permitted such outrages to be perpetrated?

It is no wonder the people show a spirit of unrest and dissatisfaction before unknown. They need relief from over taxation on the necessities of life.

How clearly and tersely President Cleveland outlined the only American policy and put into the mouths of the people a new song when he said: "The taxation upon luxuries presents no features of hardship; but the common necessities of life, used and consumed by all the people, the duty on which adds to the cost of living in every home, ought to be greatly cheapened."

It was clearly not intended that a man with a large family to feed and clothe, who is barely able to keep a floor under his feet and a roof over his head, should pay in the form of taxes as much as one having a large income and a bank account, and only a small family to support.

It is not always that the robber tariff brings industries to this country. And when this result follows an increase of duty, it is only taxing the people to keep up an industry which if left to itself would not be profitable.

"So far as the South is concerned," says the Atlanta Constitution, "there is no reason why Mr. Cleveland should not receive the hearty and enthusiastic support of every Democrat. To put the matter in its most selfish shape, it is a choice between Mr. Cleveland and the force bill—a choice between a clean, an honest, and an economical Democratic administration, and a Republican administration pledged to a force bill and to all forms of extravagance.

Of course the people of Oregon will not submit to be run by a boss who assumes to own them as so many head of stock on his range. But the blame for this state of affairs should not be all fixed upon President Harrison.

James Middleton, of New Orleans, La., writes in the New York Standard: As a single taxer and worker in the cause of social progress, I watched with interest the silver controversy in congress, and though a Greenbacker, I viewed the defeat of the Bland bill without regret.

I believe that the profits on silver coinage, which at the present price of silver and rate of purchase by government amounts to about $22,000,000 annually, should go to the taxpayer, and not to the silver monopolists.

The ends which the champions of the people sought in the free coinage of silver were these: to break the gold ring, and to make money easier.

The simple remedy which I urge for their consideration, and for the consideration of all true currency reformers is this: repeal the exception clause, "except when otherwise expressly stipulated in the contract," which is found both in the Bland bill of 1878 and the Coin Treasury Note bill of 1890.

It is the government fiat which makes even gold circulate as legal tender. Remove that fiat and gold would depreciate and circulate only as a commodity.
