LOVE OF A SQUAW.

When Spotted Tail, the noted chief, was in the height of his glory at the head of a large band in Dakota, and before he met his death at the hands of a rival chief, his hopes and affections were centered in a young danghter. young daughter, whom rumor credits with having been a remarkably handsome girl. The daughter of Chief Spotted Tail was the leader of the Indian women of her tribe, and her heart and hand were sought by all the young braves far and near, but she refused them all, and through his great affection for her her father allowed her to have her own way. Like many of her white sisters the beautiful Indian princess white sisters the beautiful indian princess bestowed her love unasked and unwel-comed. The object of her heart and soul was a white medicine man, a doctor who lived with his wife and family in a neigh-boring village, and who had been sum-moned by Spotted Tail to attend his daugh-

She would follow the doctor from her tepes to his house, and from his house to any place he might go. She refused to believe that he was beyond her reach, and like a faithful dog she was at his beels upon every opportunity. Expostniations and remonstrances from her friends and the doctor were useless. Arrest and confinement had no effect upon her, for as soon as released she would drag herself to the house of the white medicine man, where she would sit from night till morning, chanting weird Indian tales of love until removed by force. The doctor refused to come again to the lodge of Spotted Tail, and the chief was broken hearted over the condition of his daughter. The dread disease made terrible progress upon the unhappy girl, and one morning her the unhappy girl, and one morning her dead body was found on the road leading

The death of his daughter made a wonderful change in Spotted Tail's character. From a good and peaceable Indian he became quarrelsome and turbulent, which was the direct cause that led to his death. There grew up a rivalry for supremacy in his tribe between himself and Great Elk, and it soon reached that point where each threatened to shoot the other on sight. The two chieftains met one day, and Great Elk being the quicker of the two, Spotted Tail's spirit took its flight to the happy hunting grounds.

The Indian is not slow to recognize his friends, and I do not believe there is an Indian around the entire agency who would intentionally harm a newspaper man. They believe that the newspapers are their friends, and it is wonderful how soon they learn what the newspapers are saying about them, and they are just as anxious to see or hear of their names being in print as a white man .- Omaha Bee.

Borrowdale folk are as sagacious as their Borrowhale folk are as sagacious as their neighbors, but there are very curious tales told of their simplicity in old times. One of them describes the entrance of a jackass into their territory. This animal was unknown to them, and the most ancient person in the village was summoned to discover and declare its nature. He put on his spectacles and consulted his books, and came to the conclusion it was a peacock. The best story of the locality is, however, connected with the education cock. The best story of the locality is, however, connected with the education movement. A Borrowdale man having purchased that entire novelty, a pair of stirrups, in Keswick, got his wooden shoes into them, but could not get them out. He, therefore, remained sitting upon his horse in the stable for many weary days, until the genius of the family, about to enter at St. Bees, hit on the device of taking the saddle off, on which "feyther" remained on the kitchen floor for months, mained on the kitchen floor for months, carding wool. On the lad's return from carring wois trained intelligence suggested taking "feyther's" shows off and restoring him to a life of active usefulness.—San Francisco Argonaut. Wonderful Memories. Of M. de Lacepede, a well known French writer on natural history, it is recorded that he composed and corrected his works from beginning to end before he wrote them down. A similar practice is ascribed to Prescott, the American historian, who, it is said, used to compose and finish his narratives in his mind before a word of them was committed to paper.

That a man should be able thus to store his own writings in his memory is harder to understand than that he should recall the writings of another, because in the one case every word is immutable, whereas in the other nothing is absolutely fixed. It is a significant fact that a powerful memory is more generally coveted than is either the imaginative or the ratiocinative factor. faculty. This is apparently because a strong memory can be turned to so many uses, not only in literature, but in the con-duct of life.—New York Ledger.
