A PARTISAN.

Who wrote about the English oak,
Wrote sturdy verse and true;
And will have sung the poet folk
Of willow and of yew;
And what they said were words of love,
But these that praise, not mine,
I rather sing the glories of
The "quakin asp" and pine.

When in the morn the edge of day
Peers over the great peaks,
And down along the valley way
To where the torrent shrieks,
It hunts from out the haunts of shade
Full many a friend of mine,
And clear the beauties are displayed
Of "quakin asp" and pine.

Oh, deep within the mountain heart
Are wondrous treasures stored!
And suddenly the giants part
With riches from their hoard.
But fairer than the bits of gold
That in the slivers shine,
Is that sweet memory I hold
Of "quakin asp" and pine.

And nobler beauty ne'er was seen,
As climbing crag and stone,
They carpet with a royal green
The stairway to God's throne.
More fitting stair from heaven to earth
Than this could none devise,
When the pure east dawn has its birth
On "quakin asp" and pine.

Bottling Lightning.

Andrew Crosse, the English electrician, had odd encounters with people who did not understand his art, it being a time when it was far less a matter of everyday experience than it is now.

One day a party of strangers visited him to see his electrical arrangements, and looked with some anxiety at two Leyden jars when their host mentioned that, in certain states of the atmosphere, he could charge them with electricity from the clouds.

"But, Mr. Crosse," said one old gentleman gravely, "don't you think it is rather impious to bottle the lightning?"

"And don't you think, sir," was the prompt reply, "that it is rather impious to bottle rainwater?"—Youth's Companion.

Cleanliness in Fruit Culture.

Professor J. E. Humphrey insists that the treatment of fungus diseases in plants shall be preventive rather than remedial. Giving the plant abundant nourishment is not sufficient; the usual careless practice of leaving in the vineyard or orchard, lying on the ground or hanging from the branches, the dead fruits of the season which have been destroyed by fungi may work infinite mischief, as the dead fruits furnish to the fungi which attack them the most favorable possible soil for further and complete development. In the next spring the air is full of the spores of these fungi, which find lodgment in the new leaves and fruits, and so the trouble is continued.—New York Telegram.

Women the Great Discoverers.

Grant Allen in his endeavor to prove that women are not in the race says that no woman was ever a discoverer. To this a clever woman answers that all her spare moments are spent in finding things mislaid by the male members of her family. When Mrs. Columbus told her husband that he would find her father's chart and manuscripts in the right hand corner of the top drawer, does anybody believe he found them? Doubtless he came to the head of the stairs and shouted over, "Come find them for me." Flammarion can find new planets, but he can't find his own spectacles. Stanley could find Livingstone, but who doubts that Mrs. Stanley finds his pencils and mislaid manuscripts? Who can find so many virtues as a woman can find in her husband? Could he ever, unaided, find his own faults? "And," concludes this lady, "if Mr. Allen has a wife, doubtless she finds in him more than any man ever could."—Exchange.

Magical Effects of the Sapphire.

To the sapphire has been ascribed the following magical properties: That it prevents wicked thoughts; that it is such an enemy to poison that, if put in a glass with a spider or venomous reptile, it will kill it. St. Jerome in his exposition of the thirtieth chapter of Isaiah says that the sapphire promises favor with the beneficent angels, frees from all temptations and cleanses the heart. This gem was named sapphire, because when it was cut it was as blue as the sapphire at his shrine. It is a powerful remedy against all kinds of ailments.
