S. D. PERCIVAL, Editor.

Ordinary notices, resolutions, cards of thanks, programs of entertainments 1 cent a line. For all over five lines.

FRIDAY, JULY 28, 1893.

It is carefully estimated that one hundred and ten thousand men have been deprived of employment since "reform" commenced. A few more mouths of this unstable financial policy of the powers that be, coupled with threats of "tariff reform," and the toilers in life's grea workshops will be a deplorable band in beggary.—Ex.

BOUND TO HAVE HER OWN WAY.

She Knew a Bargain When She Saw One and Didn't Propose to Be Outwitted.

It was at 4 o'clock in the afternoon, at a time when the life of the average salesman is more of a burden than a pleasure.

A woman, stout and well dressed and bearing the unmistakable signs of a professional bargain hunter, elbowed her way through the crowd with a floorwalker at her heels and pounced down upon the inoffensive looking clerk.

This woman belonged evidently to that coterie who believe that their wants and their rights are to be looked after at any cost and to the exclusion of the rights of all others.

It soon became apparent to the patient, stoical salesman that the woman was to be waited upon at once. He therefore left a meek looking purchaser and came over to the frustrated specimen in petticoats.

"There!" she exclaimed, puffing, "I'm all out of breath. I've been to the superintendent, and beset me to you to have this matter fixed. You cheated me out of 10 cents yesterday, and I just want to know what you meant by that. I don't propose to be imposed upon, and you might as well understand that first as last!"

"There is nothing the matter with this that I can see," said the salesman after the floorwalker had explained the complaint.

"Nothing the matter!" exclaimed the irate woman. "Nothing the matter! Here, you've gone and charged me 20 cents for this embroidery. It should have been only 10. That was the price on the placard yesterday. Now, I'd like to know what right you had to cheat me out of 10 cents!"

The patient salesman merely remarked in a tone of professional politeness: "You are mistaken, madam. That embroidery has never been marked down to 20 cents. We really couldn't afford to sell it at that figure."

"Never been marked down to 20 cents!" she exclaimed. "Do you think I'd pay 30 cents for this embroidery? Well, I guess not. Not if I know myself."

"Is there anything I can do for you?" asked the salesman, ignoring her complaints.

"Can't you make out an order for my 10 cents or credit it to me toward other purchases?"

"Certainly not. I have no authority to do anything of the kind."

"Well," exclaimed the irate creature, "if this doesn't beat the Dutch! This is the last time I'll ever buy anything in this store—the very last. Bargains! Well, I'd like to know where the bargain is in this! Here you've compelled me to pay 30 cents for 15-cent embroidery, and"—

"Madam," interrupted the salesman, "we do not take back bargain counter goods under any circumstances. The price was plainly marked."

"Plainly marked, indeed!" she retorted. "Here I've waited and elbowed and shoved my way through the crowd at the superintendent's desk, all to get my right. It isn't the 10 cents that I care so much about, but the principle—that's what I don't like. Here I am actually insulted, and all on account of a paltry 10 cents! I know that embroidery was marked 20 cents. Do you think I can't see?"

"You are mistaken," replied the salesman.

"You are a liar!" retorted the woman, getting exceedingly red in the face.

"Madam," said the salesman in tones of freezing politeness, "you are a lady, and that is another lie I have told."

She turned and left her standing in the crowd. Meanwhile a floorwalker at her heels pounced upon the clerk and said: "You've been cheated out of 10 cents."

Decidedly Shaky.
A trembling hand, an uncertain step, fidgetiness, indicated by restless shifting from one place or posture to another, usually mental annoyance at unexpected noises, are among the indications of extreme nervousness. These seem trifling, but the health of men and women in this condition is "decidedly shaky," liable to be overthrown disastrously by causes which the vigorous might defy. To fortify the nervous system, general vigor must, through the medium of reinforced digestion, and a renewal of an impaired power of sleeping at night, be raised to a healthful standard. A guarantee of this is Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, which re-establishes digestion, bile secretion and the habit of body on a permanently regular basis, thus renewing that bodily equilibrium, which is followed by a gain of strength and nerve tranquillity. For kidney complaint, rheumatism, neuralgia, and as a preventive of the first attack or subsequent return of malarial disorders, this medicine is without a peer. Thrice daily take a wine-glassful.
