DESIRE.

Oh, sweet to be a song, a song In whose accompaniment...

Her Gown Was Odd.

Binns went alone to enjoy the reception of Company H of the First regiment at its armory on Wednesday night.

"She was a mighty pretty and well behaved girl," said Binns, "and all the best people seemed to take an interest in her."

"What was it like?" asked Mrs. Binns, who had been kept at home by measles in the family.

"I can't tell the color," said Binns. "It was like a sky blue pink, with a shade of greeny brown or something like that."

"A Mother Hubbard?" shrieked Mrs. Binns.

"Yes. One of those that tuck up under the arms and fall around the front like a flour sack, you know, with a thingamajigger with fluting up the back."

"An empire gown?" groaned Mrs. Binns, and Binns said he supposed so.

Bad Headache.

The ordinary sick headache is one that comes from a variety of causes, and the treatments are likewise numerous.

Pat Carries Out His Threat.

An Irishman who had committed the theft of an 8-day clock and several watches was much annoyed at night by the clock's persistent "tick, tick, tick," which his distorted imagination made him believe was "Pat, Pat, it was you that stole the watches."

Pat threatened that he would break its back unless it desisted, but the clock continued its steady "tick, tick, tick."

In a rage he leaped out of bed, seized the clock and hurled it out of the window. The clock in its descent struck a policeman, who in his agony yelled out:

"Oh, you've broke my back!" "Och, sure," says Pat; "O tould you O tould!" - Dublin Journal.

A Profitable Collision.

The ship Annesley was originally named the British Enterprise, but was sunk by collision in the River Tyne. It is said that she was sold under water for £1,500, was raised and repaired at a cost of £3,000 and was then resold and would for £6,000.
