the general appropriation bill were Dawson, Gomer, Hobson, and Brown. Buckley was absent on account of illness.

Through all these latter scenes joyful pandemonium reigned. Finally a committee was sent after the new senator, who appeared and made a most impressive and powerful speech.

Representative Barkley, the brilliant orator of the Marion county delegation, was called out and spoke in his usual pleasing way. He was in high favor with the masses.

Following the dissolution of the joint convention, both houses in their separate chambers adjourned sine die, and thus the most remarkable session of the Oregon Legislature ever held came to an end.

The solution of the deadlock was effected at last, after a long and arduous struggle. The legislature had no time to elect the railroad commissioner and other officers.

In the State-memorandum of January 13th last, presented to the convention of the legislature, the following appeared: "George W. McBride steps out of the years of hard work, in which he has managed the multifarious duties of the railroad commissioner."
