The audience then called for State Senator Mulkey who, in a ten-minute talk, spoke on local uestions entirely. He touched upon his efforts to reduce expenses in the state printers office and his experience with others who endeavored to assist. He showed that the state printers office was one of the biggest graft on the statute books and suggested a resolution proposing an amendment to the constitution whereby the graft of the state printer could be handled.

He spoke of the assessment and taxation laws and the disparity exsting between some of the counties, noting Polk and Multnomah, the later paying taxes on but one-fourth of its taxable property, while Polk county and other counties must make up for Multnomah's deficiency. He advocated a just assessment law and favored an inneritance tax, citing the beneficial esults obtained in other states.
